Volume 1, Issue 2, September 2018

From the Dean

On Wednesday, October 10, 2018, from 4:30-6:00 p.m., in the Nelson Poynter Memorial Library, Dr. Raymond Arsenault, the John Hope Franklin Professor of Southern History, will talk about his new book, Arthur Ashe: A Life. In it, Dr. Arsenault chronicles Ashe's tenacity on and off the court. Not only is he a world-class tennis player, but Ashe is celebrated as a tireless, consistent proponent for equal rights.

NPML has the privilege of sponsoring inspiring events like this one to share the work of USFP's own scholars and to promote a deeper understanding of diversity and inclusion.

While you're in the library to attend this event, to work with a librarian or instructional designer, or to study, take some time to check out our other displays. From September 14 through December 21, Dr. Jack Davis, Pulitzer-prize winning author of The Gulf, will be the subject of one of NPML's displays. Dr.

Davis received his Masters in History from USFSP in 1989.

I hope that your semester is off to a great start. Remember that NPML is your partner in teaching, learning, and research. Visit Five Ways to Reach a Librarian when you need to connect with us.

Spaces

Located on the first floor, right between the Male and Female restrooms, is the library's new gender-neutral washroom. Serving USFSP faculty, students, parents, and those that want just that extra little bit of privacy, our gender neutral washroom is clean and discrete. Next time you're in the library, avoid gendered labels and stereotypes and give it a flush!

Spotlight

Mark Couch, Systems Analyst, Library Systems has upgraded all student computers and laptops in the USFSP Library for this semester. New and updated applications include SPSS, JMP, ArcGIS Pro, and the latest browsers among others.

The desktop has also been redesigned, emphasizing our site-licensed software packages from Adobe & Microsoft. Windows 10 will soon be available throughout the library's labs and open use computing spaces.

Did You Know?

Familiar scenario?

You quickly scan an email, "GREAT!!" you say to yourself, here's a short video promoting new library or instructional resource. But... I've got 50 other emails to read right now and I don't really need that resource yet, I'll come back that later. Two months later, you can't remember exactly what it was, can't find it in your inbox, and life moves on.

If this situation sounds familiar, then don't worry; the library has you covered. The library supports 2 different YouTube pages featuring an assortment of videos created right here in Library.

Tapestry

Celebrate diversity with Kanopy

Have you checked out our Kanopy video collection lately? This database of streaming videos provides access to 26,000 videos from leading film and documentary producers. Even if you have used a Kanopy film in the past you may not be aware of their specialized collections such as Immigrant Stories, Race and Class Studies, Spanish Language Cinema, or collections created for special events like Native American Heritage Month.

The videos can be linked to your Canvas page as assignments or shown in class. You may also customize your own collection by combining clips or full films into a playlist.

The USFSP Nelson Poynter Memorial Library's YouTube Channel features how-to videos on demonstrating research skills and resources with playlists such as APA Citation Style, RefWorks, Designing Research Posters, Faculty Lightning Talks, and much more. We keep the videos short and specific, so you can go directly to the topic you want, rather than face a long instructional video that puts you and your students to sleep.

The Online Learning Instructional Technology also has a YouTube channel called OLITS USFSP. This channel features the dynamic Monday Minute video series, USFSP faculty spotlights, videos on how to operate classroom equipment, tips to get ready for the new semester, Quality Matters, and more.

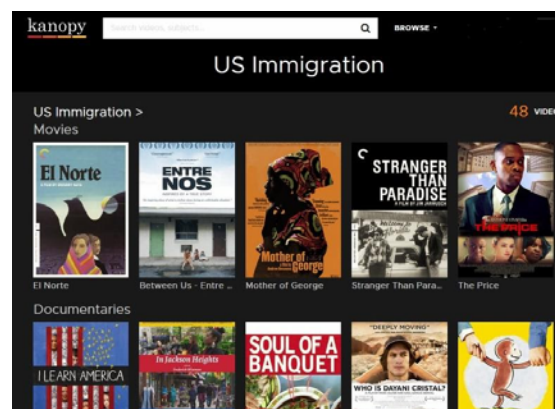

So when you forget, take a minute on Monday or any day of the week, and check out the OLITS and NPML YouTube channels

Kanopy celebrates inclusiveness with a huge variety of accessible, thought-provoking films. Don't miss out on this great resource!
