Public Services News:

>From Tina: Spring Break desk schedule

You should find a spring break desk schedule in your mailboxes. The Reference schedule is very different but circulation should remain basically the same. The new schedule will be for next week (March 11-17) only. Because of numerous leave requests, conferences, etc. it looks like we may be back to a week-by-week desk schedule for reference. I will make every effort to get the new schedules out promptly so everyone can make necessary plans.

Books in Print is now located in the "indexes to articles and reports" section of the LUIS menu. Books in Print was also added to the remote LUIS menus on Monday (2/5/96).

Search hint from FCLA: Journal code searches on LUIS databases

Where a journal code or identifier is included in the data we receive, we have made the field searchable, though not always in the same way. The databases listed below have a field for journal identifier:

Database	Field label	Search using
ABI/INFORM	Coden	nc=
Current Contents	Abbrev. journal title	kt=
Engineering Index	Coden	nc=
PsycINFO	Journal #	nc=

The other databases do not supply a brief identifier for the journal source title. BUT - the "FOUND IN:" field is indexed in all citation databases as title keyword, so a specific journal can be searched for if you know the full title or the standard abbreviation used in the database. For example, if you wanted to search General Academic index for articles on fertilizer in the "Oil and Gas Journal", use this search text:

s=fertilizer and (kt=oil same gas same journal)

 do not use "kt=oil and gas journal" because of the "and" in the title and also because the "same" operator ensures that the words will be in the same field.

a longer search than if a journal code were available.

>From FCLA: OPAC: Table of Contents (TOC) index

Among the other changes that went into production yesterday was the long-awaited table of contents index for Current Contents. This version is working, but needs a little refinement. We are still working on modifications, but wanted to let you look at the function now.

The TOC search is done from LUIS. The format of the search is: "toc={journal title}". The result of the search may be a guide, if there are a large number of hits. The guide is a browsable listing of journal titles that match your search string. The index is a list of the journal title and issues, with all article titles listed in page number order under each issue. There is a new command, "HE", which gives you a headings browse. This lists the journal titles with the volume and issue identification.

>From Kathy: EBSCOmags

I have added a list of the titles covered by EBSCOmags to the "Full Text" notebooks. Remember, this database has the virtue of telling the patron on the first screen whether a particular article is online or not. Among the titles covered with full text is JASIS. It also includes Journal of Marriage and the Family and School Library Journal, plus lots of other useful titles. Also, I discovered two new databases for phone numbers, Pro CD Biz and Pro CD Home.

>From Ed:

Two new cdrom products on cd workstation #7: County Business Patterns (1992-93), and the Statistical Abstract of the United States (1994). The County Business Patterns comes with a detailed explanation of the data sets, spiral bound, and at the reference desk.

From: Michele Newberry Dalehite <FCLMID@NERVM.NERDC.UFL.EDU>

This message is just to alert you that we'll be sending a notification to the SUS computer center directors shortly informing them of our work in developing a LUIS EMAIL function to allow users to send search results to email addresses. They need to be forewarned because this new feature will probably increase demand for email support on all your campuses. We wanted you to know of this notification to the computer centers in case any of you received queries from them before we are ready to turn this feature on.
