Interesting idea, but if number of images is limited, would it not be more important to have one of MBW's iconic photos?

Also: I have recently been reading Lt. Meyer's wartime diaries, North Africa in 1942, and lo and behold, there is a reference to meeting some nurses whose ship had been sunk...and another to having coffee with General Atkinson. Wow!

How about adding this on page 208:

Margaret Bourke-White caused a sensation wherever she went, and as I was working on this book I began to wonder now if Lieutenant Meyer ever met the glamorous photographer. Then I came upon one of his wartime diaries that had been missing. In an entry my father made late in December 1942 I found a reference to Scottish nurses whose ship had been torpedoed; and a few pages on he mentioned having coffee with General Adkinson. No mention, though, of Margaret Bourke-White.
