Vision 20/20 planning reaches major milestone

Participants in the Community Input Forum discuss ways to engage with USFSP.

The Vision 20/20 strategic planning process reached a major milestone this week with the successful completion of a series of Input Forums designed to broaden the conversation about the future of USF St. Petersburg. Six Input Forums were held between Monday and Wednesday for students, faculty and staff. A special online forum was also held for distance learning students. Last month, the St. Petersburg Downtown Partnership participated in an Input Forum during its quarterly luncheon, held at the University Student Center Ballroom. "Through these forums, I've had the pleasure of hearing some very thoughtful conversations about the future of our institution," said Regional Chancellor Sophia Wisniewska. "I am excited about the possibilities and pleased at the level of engagement and enthusiastic participation during the forums." The ideas generated during the forums will inform the final product of the strategic plan, which will be completed by the end of the 2013-14 academic year. The Vision Team will meet again Feb. 28 and March 1 and will discuss the feedback generated at the Input Forums. Read more. | View a gallery of photos from the Input Forums.

Nabil Matar, Ph.D., the Presidential Professor of Arts & Humanities at the University of Minnesota, will discuss "The Arabic Legacy in Western Thought" on Monday, March 3 at 3:30 p.m. at the University Student Center Ballroom. Both lectures are free and open to the public. Read more.

Students research modern architecture and Spanish history

The monthly Student Research Colloquium last week featured presentations by two Florida Studies graduate students on two entirely different subjects. Saber Gray discussed her work with J. Michael Francis, Ph.D., the Hough Family Endowed Chair in Florida Studies, to preserve documents dating back to 1594 at the Diocesan Archive of St. Augustine and to make them accessible to scholars around the world through the internet. The documents, she said, help paint a picture of life in St. Augustine before the founding of Jamestown. Pierson, meanwhile, discussed the research she conducted with faculty adviser Thomas Hallock, Ph.D., associate professor of English, on William Harvard, the architect of the St. Petersburg Pier and a leading proponent of Mid-Century Modern architecture. The Student Research Colloquium, which is free and open to the public, is held the third Wednesday of every month at the Nelson Poynter Memorial Library.
