Allen Picks Steering Committee

A USF Alumni steering committee headed by Julian Piper and including David Allen, Ann Francis, Leonard Jones, David Jordan, Jean and Sy Lucas, Manuel Mendoza, Evelyn O'Neal, Wing Preodor and Pete Wells was named by President John Allen at the last meeting of the newly formed USF Alumni Association, on July 25.

Among the major topics that President Allen discussed was the question of why state universities need private endowment. "There is not a single state university that has attained eminence on state funds alone," said Allen.

California an Example

For instance, he explained, the University of California, the seventh highest endowed state institution in the country, has 11 Nobel prize winners on its staff. The only way that a state institution would be able to attract and maintain such talent, explained Allen, is by supplementing state funds with private monies.

"Sixty per cent of the University of Michigan has been built with other than state funds," said Allen. He said the University of North Carolina was subsidized through private monies because the farmers of North Carolina, realizing the importance of the agricultural assistance that the University provided, assessed themselves through a "Nickles for Know-how" program. He added that at the University of Texas "Private monies have come through oil funds."

Political Interference

"State universities are not protected against political interference," explained Allen; and one way to acquire this protection is through private endowment. He said that since he has "three degrees from different institutions," he contributes to each institution's endowment fund. "I have been paying certain institutions back for giving me my education," he said.

Allen cited "tax exempton" and "putting money to good use" as reasons why persons might want to endow a university. Not only does USF need "ambassadors," explained Allen, it also needs an alumni association that actively assists, through solicitation of private monies, in establishing an effective endowment fund in order "to become really distinguisted."

USF Botanist Receives Grant

A University of South Florida botanist has received a $16,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for a genetic study of ruellia, a group of tropical plants about which little is known.

Principal investigator will be Dr. Robert W. Long, associate professor of botany, who will do full time research in two summer months of 1963, 1964 and 1965 and two months during the spring of 1964. Stipends included in the grant will permit employment of upper class botany students for research assistants.

Included in the research program will be field work, research garden observations and experimentations and trips to the Gray Herbarium, New York Botanical Garden, Smithsonian Institute, Chicago Museum of Natural History and Missouri Botanical Garden. It will be a continuation of research work begun three years ago by Dr. Long.

Housing Available For Tampa Students

USF is now accepting housing applications from Tampa area students, a departure from the previous policy of granting priority for housing to students living beyond a 20-mile radius of the campus.

The completion of a new residence hall with accommodations for 460 students had made the change possible. The new hall, third to be built on campus, brings total student accommodation to some 1300.

New students considering enrolling at USF this fall should make application for admission and housing as soon as possible, as the available dormitory space will be filled on a first come, first served basis.

DANNENBERG DISCUSSES PROPULSION

K. K. Dannenberg, Deputy Director of the Saturn Project of NASA, traces the history of the engines used by the U.S. in its missile arsenal. Dannenberg was one of several lecturers on campus in conjunction with the third annual Aerospace Conference which concludes this week.

ENDS THIS WEEK

Medaris Sounds Keynote Address for Conference

The keynote of the third aerospace conference, which enters its second and final week today, was sounded by Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, U.S. Army (Ret.), at the opening of the conference last Monday. He suggested as appropriate, the statement, "The future belongs to those who prepare for it. Those who do not prepare for the future are unlikely to have one of any importance."

Medaris

Medaris, former head of this country's space efforts, told participants, "basically, I propose to challenge all of you as teachers with the critical importance of motivating toward and inculcating into everyone with whom you come into contact a broader understanding of the natural sciences and their influences on our society and the nature of our existence."

U.S. Not Meeting Requirements

In referring to the race between Russia and the Western world for scientific and technological leadership, he stated that the United States was not meeting its requirements for 100,000 science and engineering graduates a year, while Russia will shortly be turning out 250,000 a year.

This is relatively easy for Russia to do, he added, since under the Communist system relatively narrow and highly specialized areas of study are selected, assigned and enforced in accordance with the intentions of the State regarding avenues of scientific progress. Relatively few may be exposed to a broad scientific education to serve as guides.

Approach Inconsistent

"Such an approach is totally inconsistent with the needs of a free society," he commented, "where there is no business or industry that can afford to ignore or be unprepared to evaluate the effect of technology on its management decisions."

In setting up our own education program, Medaris proposed, as objectives: a broad andage 50; air-conditioned, glass-domed cities; and extensive space travel.

Leading scientists from government, industry and universities lectured during the week on such topics as celestian mechanics, orbits and trajectories, radiation environment in space, cosmology, radio-astronomy, liquid and solid propulsion systems, inertial guidance, navigation in space and problems of re-entry.

The conference will end Aug. 10.

Re-Enrollment Data Given

Students not attending USF during Trimester I this fall will need to re-enroll in order to return for Trimester II. If a former student, however, who did not register for the current Trimester III, plans to return this fall, he will not need to re-enroll.

The purpose for the re-enrollment form is to bring the students', registration file up to-date, according to Merle V. Slater, Director of Records at the Registrar's Office. A registration packet is automatically made for all current students. However, if the student does not show-up for a trimester, the packet is not assembled.

Slater explained the reason a former student not enrolled in Trimester III this summer does not re-enroll. "The Registrar's Office takes into consideration that some students need the summer months for jobs or other reasons."

Sport News For Tri III B

Richard Hunter, Intramural Co-ordinator, won the All-Campus Golf Tournament with a low gross total of 87. Second place went to Burt Benson, student from Del Ray Beach, with an 88. A total of 22 entered the tournament which was preceded by a golf clinic.

Frank Hancock won the men's Intramural tennis championship. He joins Becky Sankner who recently won in the women's division.

The Faculty Flops captured the softball championship with a 7-0 record. They were followed by the USF Hasbeens (5-1) in second place, and the Unknowns (4-2) in third.

Merilee O'Berry was the winner in the women's division of the Archery tournament with a 139. Second place was Cathy Guyer, 127. First place for the men went to David Jenkins, 278, while Dennis Brown came in second with a 252.

Professors Reluctant On Trimester System

But Students Feel It Has Been Profitable

When asked their opinion of the success of the trimester system some USF professors were reluctant to be quoted.

However, several quite frank comments were given. Dr. Vernon Edmond, Assistant Professor of Sociology, said that the trimester system was designed by the state legislature "to get more work out of the professors for very little increase in pay." He stated, "In this it has achieved its purpose." Dr. Edmonds related that 25 per cent more work is involved for the professor with only 10 per cent in pay increase.

Along the same line Dr. Alva Beecher commented, "The major disadvantage of the trimester system is that it doesn't give the professors sufficient leisure time to study and prepare their materials since the new system cuts down especially on vacation time allowed."

Dr. Robert Goldstein, Assistant Professor of History, said that he has "some reservations about the system." Basically, he stated, "it will work out o.k. Theoretically, it is good for the students but in practice it presents problems which we did not anticipate, such as estimating enrollment figures and number of sections which should be opened."

"The trimester system is undeniably an advantage for the students" agreed Robert O'Hara, Assistant Professor of English. However, O'Hara was disturbed by the seven week sessions. On these he commented, "Trying to condense into a seven-week period what takes 14 weeks is unfair to both students and teachers. This is especially true in courses that require a lot of reading, such as English literature courses."

Dr. A. T. Scroggins, Associate Professor of Journalism thinks that "It is much too early to evaluate the trimester system. He added on a bright note, "I think that everyone benefits, however, from the ending of Trimester I before Christmas. Now no one has to face the mad rush of exams when they return." The former procedure of exams, another vacation and registration soon after Christmas, he feels, was confusing and not very effcient as regards the learning process.

Admittedly the sample is not representative, but of eight students interviewed four feel that they have profited by attending all three trimesters. Three of the four like the trimester system because "it gives you an opportunity to finish school much faster." One person truthfully said, "I hate it; it rushes things too much and doesn't really prove beneficial." Other persons interviewed had other opinions.

Mrs. Rose English remarked that the trimester system "could be good," but as it is now "they squeezed a semester's work into the trimester system, then they squeezed it even tighter into the III A and B setup, the courses are too shallow to be beneficial. Further, the trimester system encourages students to go through college too rapidly."

She added, "I prefer the quarter system because the courses are set up with the recognition of less class time."

Dr. Hicks Becomes SMU Dean, Prof.

Dr. John Hicks, professor and former chairman of Humanities at USF, has been named Dean of the University College and Professor of English at Southern Methodist University, according to an announcement by SMU President Willis M. Tate.

Hicks

Dr. Hicks was elected by the SMU Board of Trustees upon recommendation of President Tate.

Former executive director of the College English Association and professor at Lawrence College and Stetson University, Dr. Hicks is a recognized scholar, author and teacher. He is an authority on college programs for superior students, aesthetics, critical theory, the interrelationship of literature and the arts and Twentieth Century arts and letters. He is author, co-author or editor of a number of books, many scholarly and professional articles, and has presented lectures and addresses to various professional meetings and university forums.

Part of Master Plan

The University College of which Dr. Hicks becomes Dean effective in September is a new SMU academic unit conceived as part of the university's far-reaching master plan for the academic future announced last May. The University College will begin operation in September, 1964, and Dean Hicks will be active in its initiation and organization during the coming year.

President Tate said of the appointment of Dr. Hicks, "Not only is Dr. Hicks a distinguished scholar-teacher and administrator, but he has had wide experience in matters of interdisciplinary courses, independent study, and honors programs which makes him especially well qualified to direct SMU's new University College."

Native of Texas

A native of Port Arthur, Tex., Dean Hicks attended public schools in Alabama and Kentucky, and was awarded the B.A. degree with highest honors and the M.A. degree from the University of Louisville. He holds the Doctor of Philosophy degree, in English literature, from the State University of Iowa.

From 1931 to 1946 Dr. Hicks held positions in English at the University of Louisville, Mississippi State College, Purdue University, and Miami University.

He was associate professor of English and director of writing at Lawrence College from 1947 to 1949.

During 1949-1960 Dr. Hicks was professor of English at Stetson University. At various times he served as director of English Studies, director of Humanities, and director of Honors Programs at Stetson.

He became professor and director of Humanities at the University of South Florida in 1960.

Dr. Hicks served as executive director of the College English Association from January 1960 to January 1963 and is presently treasurer of that organization.

Writer's Task as Arduous As Surgeon's, Says Novelist

By FRANCES FREEMAN

"Becoming a writer is almost as arduous a task as becoming a brain surgeon." Jose Yglesias, recently acclaimed for his novel of local color, A Wake in Ybor City, reviewed the problems of a writer at Tuesday's informal Meet the Author program.

Yglesias, welcomed by Steve Knowles and introduced by David Tramontana, says he writes because he wants to have his say. "However," he added, "You cannot have your say until you have mastered the craft."

"Had His Say"

Yglesias has "had his say," and has come home to witness the repercussions. "But Thomas Wolfe is wrong," he said. "You can go home again." The author betrayed his disappointment, though, when he almost pleaded for "someone to get mad at me."

The writer sat down, and Dr. Ed Hirshberg began throwing the questions. He challenged Yglesias' ability to transplant himself back to Ybor City since he had been away since 1937. Relying on memory and on second-hand accounts, the author explained that he had never lost the Ybor City flavor. "Your great formative years are your early years and your adolescence," he explained. He added that living outside of Ybor City had helped him to write more objectively.

Editor Liked It

When asked what he thought about Time Magazine's review of his book, Yglesias merely commented, "My editor liked it." But then Hirshberg pressed the point, and Yglesias admitted that a writer is never satisfied with a review that contains criticism.

The author's comment that "a young writer must avoid harsh criticism" prompted the accusation that he apparently aims just to please others. "The aim is to reach others," he explained. "If you don't do that you feel miserable."

In discussing his work, Yglesias expressed his desire that his novel be not so much about a place as about people. He paraphrased W. H. Auden who stressed that the novelist must live the life of an ordinary person who can disappear in a crowd and become part of it.

"MY EDITOR LIKED IT"

. . . replied Jose Yglesias in speaking of his book, A Wake In Ybor City. Yglesias, recent Meet the Author lecturer, spoke of the problems involved in writing about one's home town.

4,000 Expected In Fall

Four thousand students are expected to register for Trimester I, Sept. 3-5. This is 400 over the number of students attending the university last fall.

Priority registration will be given to students with a grade average of 3.0 and above. Merle V. Slater, director of records, stated that students will register by appointment, and that all students with a 4.0 average will have the earliest appointments, Sept. 3 at 8 a.m.

The priority system of registration assigns appointments to students with the highest average first. Time assignment is further broken down to grade classification and then student number. The first appointment is assigned to a senior with a 4.0 average and the lowest student number. Successive appointments are assigned to juniors, sophomores, freshmen, transit students and non-degree seekers in that order in the same manner. Under this system all former students have received registration appointments for Sept. 3 no later than 9:15 a.m.

The priority system was put into effect in an attempt to be as fair as possible to all students, according to Slater. The registrar's office first tried the alphabet system with rotation and later a "first come, first serve" method. However, these did not seem satisfactory to all concerned.

Former USF Students In Larceny Trial

The grand larceny trial of Stephen Perunko, 21, and William Martino, 20, both former USF students, was continued in a hearing held July 26, until Sept. 16. The former students were arrested April 11 on charges of having approximately $1,000 worth of university property—including a tape recorder, portable organ, microphones and meters—in their possession. They were suspended from USF pending action in criminal court and their parents notified.

According to the Report on Student Disciplinary Procedures for Trimester I-II, 1962-63, this was the only case which had to be turned over to criminal court downtown. Other cases involved mainly the theft of books which were later recovered and the students punished by limited suspension from the university. One case, however, involved the theft of 100 books valued at approximately $265. This student was permanently expelled with psychiatric help recommended; the books were recovered and he was released to his parents rather than the criminal court.

Another case, cited in the report, involved "flooding the floor in Beta Hall." This miscreant had to pay for damages and was expelled from the university. One prank, "placing severed hogs' heads on the campus gate entrance," resulted in the reprimand of the student.
