I guessed that A was America, searched for "Modern B of America" and came up with a couple of hits. From this:

it looks like a fraternal organization, possibly Modern Brotherhood of

Hello:

Now that the school year has started, I just wanted to remind all my librarians that Ancestry.com does offer a Classroom Learning Grant available for the K12 classroom.? This is free 3-month access to Ancestry Institution (think of it as Ancestry Library Edition with the same limitations - no remote or building online trees).? The teacher just need to request the document / application from me.? It is basically filling out an application (name, address, IP range, contact, name of class project and age range of the students).? It is that simple, no fancy grant writers needed.

Ancestry has also commissioned a K12 teacher to author our 19 lesson plans available at no charge by also writing to me.? These lesson plans are written to the State Standards.? Here is that list.

? 1940 Census Lesson

? The Census and the Constitution

? The Census and the Depression

? Autobiography

? Biography

? Immigration Over Time

? Civil War

? Military Lesson (Civil War)

? Personal Side of War (American Revolutionary War)

? War of 1812 ? Privateers

? Mobilization for War (WWI)

? Battles (WWII)

? Local History is Your Community History

? Historical Crime

? Haunted House

? Suffrage Movement

? How Life Influences Art

? African American Congressmen Lesson

? Trail of Tears Lesson

I have attached the Haunted House Lesson plan to this e-mail.?

I also would like to remind you to follow the Ancestry Library Team at Ancestry-reference-desk.com or on Facebook under Ancestry-reference-desk.? This site was designed with librarian's and their patrons in mind.? This is great way to pick up tips in using Ancestry as well as information about our rich collections on our site and the value those records play in your patrons quest for their ancestors.?

Happy Family History Month and Happy Halloween!

Instead of a newsletter, may I suggest either an email list (such as the Yahoo! service) or a group Facebook page, and/or possibly a blog? You'll need 1 or 2 people to be the owners/moderators of the group, but I think social media is more flexible and inclusive because different people can post their questions, discoveries, etc. It would also be good for last minute announcements, like weather-related closures.

Of course, this suggestion depends on the level of comfort your members have with the technology, but Yahoo! groups work like regular emails so that might be the easiest.

Best wishes,

Instead of a newsletter, may I suggest either an email list (such as the Yahoo! service) or a group Facebook page, and/or possibly a blog? You'll need 1 or 2 people to be the owners/moderators of the group, but I think social media is more flexible and inclusive because different people can post their questions, discoveries, etc. It would also be good for last minute announcements, like weather-related closures.

Of course, this suggestion depends on the level of comfort your members have with the technology, but Yahoo! groups work like regular emails so that might be the easiest.

Greetings from Maine!

I teach genealogy classes here at the Maine State Library, and just had a class that was so enthusiastic they just didn't want to stop meeting; so, they suggested that we form a genealogy club. It's fine with my supervisor, and I think it's a great idea. I'd love to hear from any of you that sponsor clubs, and see what tips you might have for keeping the club going. I'd welcome any negatives as well...

Thanks so much!

I am co-Library Director for Clark County (WA) Genealogical Society. Our collection is comprised of about 8,200 items, most of which have been donated. Our collection has been circulating in the past, but about a year ago we made our collection non-circulating. The problem we are experiencing is that some of our members or volunteer librarians seem to be taking books home and then bringing them back weeks later, if we are fortunate enough to get them back at all. I understand that they may feel somewhat entitled to do this, but it is beginning to become a problem. We have been unable to identify any individuals, because the books just seem to disappear and then mysteriously reappear, but not always.

My co-Library Director and I have thought about making the collection circulating again. Hopefully, these individuals would check them out instead of just taking them. The advantage would be that we would at least know who had the book and if they did not bring it back we could bill them for the cost of replacing the book. The disadvantage is that replacing some of the books would be quite expensive because many of them are out of print. As it is, we are currently replacing them out of our small purchasing budget which limits our ability to purchase newer materials.

How have other small libraries or societies handled this kind of situation?
What are your circulation policies? What would you suggest? Thank you for your help.

Could this be brought up for discussion at a society meeting? Perhaps a full airing of the issues and costs involved will make the offenders aware of the significance of the problem they are causing. In most genealogy collection most of the collection is out of print, and much was never "in print" in the first place, being family histories printed off a personal computer file and donated. For that reason, I would not advise making the collection circulating again.

Do you have a copy machine where patrons can make copies of relevant pages at an affordable price to take home? You may want to consider lowering your copy charge, or making x amount of copies free to society members, or set a lower rate for card-carrying society members.

Interesting problem Sherry and I am so glad that you posted it here.
Several years ago when I volunteered for a local genealogical society library we also had this problem. When the library first opened to the general public any researcher could search through the file cabinets for surname files. Nothing in our collection?EVER circulated though, so it came as quite a surprise when I noticed things were going missing . . . files and even books. It was a board decision to lock the file cabinets and only allow the volunteers to search through the drawers for researchers. There was no way to lock the book shelves because they did not have doors.
I thought the problem was handled until I returned from a two week vacation. You can just imagine my shock when I found not only files missing, but books that were part of my own personal collection placed in the genealogy library on loan. Some of these books had even been signed by the authors and inscribed to me. It had to be the volunteers because there were not any researchers in the library?during my absence. ?I have to laugh now, but I was?pretty upset then.?I?actually had to? retrain the volunteers and (as Susan suggested) have a full airing of the issues, but at a volunteers meeting not a society meeting.
Fortunately enough with the files I had made duplicates to keep on hand just in case something like this did happen. It seemed to me that where the files were concerned, when the volunteers saw "Copy" marked on files they had donated to the library they thought it was okay to take it back. Who knows what they were thinking about the books because I certainly could not make copies of those.
My personal opinion is . . . when you work with the general public and aging patrons and volunteers . . . you can never assume ANYTHING!

Everyone,

I've had a few comments recently about librarians contacting the DAR Store and being told that they do not accept purchase orders. This is only slightly the case because we do accept them but on receipt the store's staff then sends an invoice requesting payment in advance from the invoice before sending the item ordered. I'm told that the reason for their doing it this way is that there had been so many instances in the past where we accepted the invoice from an institution, sent the item, and then never got payment despite numerous attempts to collect. So, a few bad apples...

I hope that helps explain how it works. Sending the purchase order will result in the invoice leading to payment and then a library's receipt of the requested item.

All three of the people who work in the DAR Store are aware of this procedure, so going ahead and sending the purchase order is the way to start the process.

Eric, and everyone,

I know of one library that paid only upon reception of the publication. I hope this is no longer the case, but policies such as this will require creativity in untying this knot.

Eric, and everyone,

I know of one library that paid only upon reception of the publication. I hope this is no longer the case, but policies such as this will require creativity in untying this knot.

Everyone,

because we do accept them but on receipt the store's staff then sends an invoice

told that the reason for their doing it this way is that there had been so many instances in the past where we accepted the invoice from an institution, sent the

I hope that helps explain how it works. Sending the purchase order will result in the invoice leading to payment and then a library's receipt of the requested item.

We can purchase up to a specified amount using a credit card without a purchase order, from both registered and unregistered vendors. Above a certain amount, or for vendors that have not registered with the state (requiring a fee and loads of paperwork and time), we must use a purchase order and get a check cut. We also must receive the purchase before payment is rendered in this instance.

Maybe a similar permission for P-card (government-speak for a "purchasing card" or credit card in the agency's name) use will settle this.

It lacks logic, but it's state government.

Yes, a business credit card is by far the best way to order, but we know that is not always an option for government agencies. I hope this isn't a lingering problem for people ordering our publications. If anyone continues to have issues, please let me know and I may have to go "upstairs" with this!!!

The volunteer librarians need to understand that non-circulating means the books stay in the collection.? I assume the reason you made the collection non-circulating was so that when people came to do research, they could count on the materials in the collection being there.?
This makes it a research collection.

It is difficult to change a culture where items were allowed to be checked out, but now are not.? But the volunteer librarians must change their mindset to understand the importance of having the materials available.?

I do not think you should change the policy because volunteers do not want to adhere.? This is rewarding bad behavior and encourages more violations of the rules.? Perhaps volunteers as a reward could be allowed to check out one item and when they bring it back, they can get another item.? If the item never comes back, they do not get another item.?

Perhaps let the volunteers track the prices of the replacements so they understand what they are costing the library and what they are not getting because some folks are abusing the system.?

I do not see an easy and fool-proof solution to this.

Thank you everyone for your suggestions on dealing with a difficult situation in a small genealogical society library. We have made a policy to allow 10 free photocopies a day and a per copy cost of 10 cents for additional copies. The suggestion to allow volunteers to check out one item at a time as a reward for their service is a great one and I will be taking it to the library committee for approval later this month. We are also going to remind all of our volunteer librarians of why the policy was changed and how they can help. The Board also authorized the purchase of a locking bookcase where we could house the most valuable and rare items in our collection. That will keep patrons from walking out with the material, but not necessarily the volunteer librarians. Hopefully, we will lose less of our collection as we go forward. Thanks again.

I do not think you should change the policy because volunteers do not want to adhere. This is rewarding bad behavior and encourages more violations of the rules. Perhaps volunteers as a reward could be allowed to check out one item and when they bring it back, they can get another item. If the item never comes back, they do not get another item.

Perhaps let the volunteers track the prices of the replacements so they understand what they are costing the library and what they are not getting because some folks are abusing the system.

I do not see an easy and fool-proof solution to this.

Thank you everyone for your suggestions on dealing with a difficult situation in a small genealogical society library. We have made a policy to allow 10 free photocopies a day and a per copy cost of 10 cents for additional copies. The suggestion to allow volunteers to check out one item at a time as a reward for their service is a great one and I will be taking it to the library committee for approval later this month. We are also going to remind all of our volunteer librarians of why the policy was changed and how they can help. The Board also authorized the purchase of a locking bookcase where we could house the most valuable and rare items in our collection. That will keep patrons from walking out with the material, but not necessarily the volunteer librarians. Hopefully, we will lose less of our collection as we go forward. Thanks again.

Sherry Warren, co-Library Director

Clark County (WA) Genealogical Society

sherrywarren.ccgs at gmail.com

The volunteer librarians need to understand that non-circulating means the books stay in the collection. I assume the reason you made the collection non-circulating was so that when people came to do research, they could count on the materials in the collection being there. This makes it a research collection.

It is difficult to change a culture where items were allowed to be checked out, but now are not. But the volunteer librarians must change their mindset to understand the importance of having the materials available.

I do not think you should change the policy because volunteers do not want to adhere. This is rewarding bad behavior and encourages more violations of the rules. Perhaps volunteers as a reward could be allowed to check out one item and when they bring it back, they can get another item. If the item never comes back, they do not get another item.

Perhaps let the volunteers track the prices of the replacements so they understand what they are costing the library and what they are not getting because some folks are abusing the system.

I do not see an easy and fool-proof solution to this.

This is kind of a late response to Toni's post! But our library has been thinking about instituting genealogy "appointments" for patrons who need a little extra research assistance or help with specific genealogy problems. Those of you who already do this-what has been your experience, positive and negative? Any special dos and don'ts? How do you structure and publicize it?

Thanks!

Hi Emily, I began a monthly genealogy group about 9 years ago and the response has been wonderful.
The first 2 meetings featured a well known Long Island genealogist who presented a 2 part getting started class. I'm not sure what your budget will be but our success is due to the expert presenters I have been able to hire. We have had talks on vital records, military records, various ethnicities, etc. Our meetings run from 10 to 11:30 a.m. on a Saturday and we offer a 9:30 a.m. getting started class before every meeting.
I also offer individual "genealogy one-on-one" sessions.
The experience has been very positive. Many group members have become very close and travel to the archives or cemeteries together.

Best Wishes,

I have been scheduling appointments for years, and I prefer it because the appointments usually take from 30-90 minutes. That way I can schedule the appointments so the customer isn't shortchanged by something else on my schedule.

The experience is usually positive. Customers like to know they will have your attention for as long as they need. The few negatives are dependent more on the customer than on the fact of an appointment.

Our public service desks have supplies of business cards of those librarians who can handle genealogy questions, and the customers are encouraged to phone for an appointment.

Our staff was always too small to be able to spare someone for an appointment, so in 2003 we instituted a volunteer docent program. We trained people from the local genealogy societies, gave them detailed tours and instructions, a list of what was and was not allowed and our written expectations. They sign up for specific shifts. Even though I retired I still do the scheduling for this.

So far - 10 years on - it has proven to be very popular and the users love it. The volunteers can spend the time working with the patrons, and the staff can get their assigned tasks done as well. Of course staff will opine and guide when asked, but this way the volunteers can take the time to sit down and help someone in detail.

I too have been scheduling appointments for a number of years, and it works similarly to Mr. Blohm?s process. People also catch me when I am scheduled to cover the information desk, but then they have to share me with whatever other interruptions might occur (other walk-in patrons, phone calls). The formal appointment allows me to give individual patrons my undivided attention, and they certainly appreciate that.

The experience has been generally positive.   We advertise the service in our monthly email newsletter and calendar of events. I believe it helps draw people to our services and increase our statistics. The main drawback: I sometimes have trouble pulling myself away from a brick-wall challenge once we get started.

We have also been using the "one-on-one" appointment method for years and find it a great way to give focused genealogy assistance. Each of the Local History staff members are trained to assist with one on one appointments and appointments are encouraged. One of our most popular services, appointments run 60-90 minutes and are generally scheduled during quiet times of the day. As a department, we average 20 per month in the "slow" months and over 30 during popular months for genealogy research. Both staff and customers enjoy the time spent in the appointments.

In addition to using One-on-One volunteers to work with patrons in the library by appointment, we soon had volunteers from the local Daughters of the American Revolution and the Ohio Society of Mayflower Descendants ask if they could handle any One-on-One requests from beginners concerning those time periods - providing volunteers by appointment. Of course they mention their group in the conversation. It has worked out well and is mutually beneficial to all, so consider alternate sources for these volunteers.

One of our rules with volunteer work is that no money is involved or to be mentioned. Individual volunteer sessions could easily lead to client solicitations if you are not clear with your volunteers upfront in your training. If the patron mentions remuneration, our group is a charitable organization and takes donations.

Tom Neel, Library Director

Ohio Genealogical Society

We have also been using the "one-on-one" appointment method for years and find it a great way to give focused genealogy assistance. Each of the Local History staff members are trained to assist with one on one appointments and appointments are encouraged. One of our most popular services, appointments run 60-90 minutes and are generally scheduled during quiet times of the day. As a department, we average 20 per month in the "slow" months and over 30 during popular months for genealogy research. Both staff and customers enjoy the time spent in the appointments.

I too have been scheduling appointments for a number of years, and it works similarly to Mr. Blohm's process. People also catch me when I am scheduled to cover the information desk, but then they have to share me with whatever other interruptions might occur (other walk-in patrons, phone calls). The formal appointment allows me to give individual patrons my undivided attention, and they certainly appreciate that.

The experience has been generally positive.   We advertise the service in our monthly email newsletter and calendar of events. I believe it helps draw people to our services and increase our statistics. The main drawback: I sometimes have trouble pulling myself away from a brick-wall challenge once we get started.

I have been scheduling appointments for years, and I prefer it because the appointments usually take from 30-90 minutes. That way I can schedule the appointments so the customer isn't shortchanged by something else on my schedule.

The experience is usually positive. Customers like to know they will have your attention for as long as they need. The few negatives are dependent more on the customer than on the fact of an appointment.

Our public service desks have supplies of business cards of those librarians who can handle genealogy questions, and the customers are encouraged to phone for an appointment.

Hi Martha,

The Seattle Public Library offers 30-minute one-on-one genealogy appointments in addition to our regularly staffed genealogy desk hours. We use an Outlook calendar to schedule the appointments and have slots at 3:00 and 4:00 p.m. Tuesday through Friday. We try to make it clear that the 30 minutes goes quickly and encourage patrons to focus on a particular research question, person, etc., but scheduling one 30-minute appointment per hour allows us the flexibility to extend appointments if everything is going well and we're not scheduled for back-to-back appointments.

To promote appointments we have a sign at the genealogy desk along with a half-sheet flyer explaining how to get genealogy assistance at the library. We also mention our regular genealogy desk hours and appointments during our genealogy programs (databases, beginning, tours, etc.). Our appointments are also listed in the Washington State Genealogical Society Newsletter and the Seattle Genealogical Society Bulletin.

We've been doing appointments for a couple years now and it's been going well. The demand isn't overwhelming, but we have a steady stream of people signing up and our patrons appreciate the added service.

Let me know if you have any questions.

Do you need funds for a research project related to history librarianship?

If so, consider applying for the Gale Cengage Learning History Research and Innovation Award. The $2,500 award is available to librarians for expenditures such as travel expenses to consult distant materials, to pay photocopying charges, to obtain copyright permissions, to offset publication subvention costs, to buy equipment needed for the project, to purchase research-related office supplies, or like expenditures.

Additional details and application materials are available here:
http://www.ala.org/rusa/sections/history/research_award

Applications are due December 15th.

Can someone please suggest some materials or online resources for a genealogy session for students? I'm looking for something to use for 4th graders and up. If something already exists that would be a great help. We have a group coming to the library in a few weeks.

FamilySearch recommends [http://kids.familytreemagazine.com/kids/default..asp] Family Tree Kids! as an online resource.

Susan Provost Beller's Roots for Kids is an excellent books for teachers of the age group you'll be teaching.

Mary J. Johnson's Super Smart Information Strategies: Your Fascinating Family History is geared toward 2nd & 3rd graders and so may be too young for your class, although it is good in other ways.

Jim Ollhoff's Beginning Genealogy in the Your Family Tree series is excellent for 4th graders, although too short on details of finding records outside of your family home or online.

Aboutgenealogy.com has some great kid oriented family trees to print out.
We printed some out for a cub scout group that came in. Then we discussed what the word genealogy means, as well as, ancestor and descendant. Then we asked questions about memories they have made with their ancestors. What are some of the special things you do with your grandparents, cousins, aunts and uncles? Kids can relate better to genealogy if it's more recent and deals with people they actually know.

Rebecca and others,

I taught a basic genealogy class to eighth graders a few years ago when they were studying biography as a literature genre. One of my introductory activities was to have everyone stand and remain standing if the answer to the question was "yes"-I asked questions like:

Do you know your birthday?
Do you know your name as it appears on your birth certificate?
Do you know your father's birthday? Mother's birthday?
Do you know where your mother was born?

Things that most kids would know; everyone had a chance to stand for a while at least. The questions would get progressively harder-e.g., do you know your maternal grandmother's first name? her maiden name? (and we would stop and discuss what 'maternal' and 'maiden name' meant.)

Eventually everyone sat down.   A number of kids knew quite a bit already.

Best of luck in your classes.

Greetings!

These are all great suggestions! I've been trying to get kids and young adults fired up about genealogy, and even offered an adult ed. course, but it never got off the ground. A few of my ideas were: using a workbook with younger kids, such as Rosemary Chorzempa's My Family Tree Workbook; for a relative's interview, using a "20 Questions" format instead (with the gameboard); doing something fun with nicknames; and, displaying a world map and adding tags with ancestors' names, showing where they came from.

Thanks for sharing! I particularly like the "stand up if you know the answers" exercise.

How about for children?variously biologically fathered but?who live with a ?parent sho is in a same-sex relationship?? I ask the se questions because some children in the community our library serves are in such households.

Subject: [Genealib] looking for genealogy materials for grade school students - 4th grade and up
Can someone please suggest some materials or online resources for a genealogy session for students? I?m looking for something to use for 4th graders and up. If something already exists that would be a great help. We have a group coming to the library in a few weeks.

Thank you,
Rebecca

I have a book ?The Kids? Family Tree Book? by caroline Leavitt by Sterling Publ.
Co. $5.95 from Borders books.   Doesn?t seem to reach to some of the ideas you mentioned but I?m sure that these could be worked into it.

Adding to the original query, can anyone suggest titles or locations of child-appropriate genealogical materials that would work well for families of half-siblings, children who have different fathers, to whom their mother may not have been married? How about for children variously biologically fathered but who live with a parent sho is in a same-sex relationship? I ask these questions because some children in the community our library serves are in such households.

Thanks,

Donnis Headley

Roots for Kids, by Susan Beller, published by Genealogical Publishing Co., is written at a fourth grade level.

I'd love to hear feedback on World Vital Records. We have had Ancestry LE and Heritage Quest for many years, and they get quite a lot of use.
