Does anyone do genealogy classes for kids and have tips and tricks to share? We currently do basic, advanced and themed genealogy classes for adults with an occasional high school or college student and do one-on-one appointments. We have had a few requests from grandparents and home school families for classes for kids only or with their parents/grandparents so looking to create a new program.

Thanks,

Good luck. SS

Julie,

I have not done a lot of this, but some. My part was mostly in presentation, not so much hands-on assistance, so be warned.

It depends on what age group you are working with, but I have found that using several visual items, i.e., artifacts like a cap, gun or saber from the Civil War, or a mortar and pestle from an ancestor who was a physician. Visuals really keep their attention.

Secondly, I like to relate genealogy to a mystery . . . most young people like solving mysteries. ?Somebody is hiding and we need to find them . . . ?

These are just a few tips or suggestions, so it is not great help. Perhaps, it might spark an idea.

The New England Historic Genealogical Society is hosting its first ever kids event this Saturday, December 5: "Climbing Your Family Tree" a day of genealogy for kids? (poster attached). We have created an activity packet for the elementary school age group and will have themed stations throughout the library that encourage interview skills, photo and document analysis, and research strategies. We hope these materials and our experience from Saturday's event will help inform the creation of a school program and teacher resources.

The event is free and open to the public. Please stop by!

Julie as our society librarian and not afraid of children I often speak to students.
I've done hour long programs for 2nd graders. I tell stories of my own family and bring pictures. I try to gear it for them asking their families and having a family member help them put the stories down and they can draw pictures to go along with them. What grandparent is going to tell a second grader no? I also like to tell them the origin of some surnames.
I still remember a class that one little boy said I'm a Carpenter and a little girl said I'm a Smith.

I've done something similar for older home schooler groups but I try to go into a little more genealogy type info.

We also had a high school teacher that used our facility for many years as part of an AP class. They toured a local cemetery and picked someone buried there to do a project on. This was over the semester but would do research in our library, the state archives and library and the public library. As well as visiting the recorder's office and working online. I could see something similar on a smaller scale.

I love getting children into family history.

Hello to all;
If your library is a member of NEFLIN (Northeast Florida Information Network), you're eligible to attend a free genealogy program on Friday.

I know this is late notice, but the speaker for the all day seminar will be George G. Morgan, a well known genealogy speaker and author. The program will be held at NEFLIN's headquarters in Orange Park, and George's topic will be: "Helping Your Patrons Use the Growing Wealth of Available Genealogical Evidence Record Types"

There will also be a Genealogy Interest Group informal discussion during the lunch break. Anyone is welcome to attend this too. You will need to register for both sessions if you're interested in the seminar AND the discussion.

Registration is open until 9:00 AM on Thurs, Dec. 4th. The links for registration and information about the program can be found here:

http://events.r20.constantcontact.com/register/event?llr=8u8ovccab&oeidk=a07eba1aeq03abbfd7c

I know this program will be very interesting, and I hope, despite the late notice, you can attend!

I'd also be interested in any handouts or power point programs someone has. I have been trying to figure out a way to get kids started and interested. I had thought about having a few volunteers help with a small group to help them look for things on Ancestry or Family Search...but that would entail getting information ahead of time so we can at least get back to the 1940 census - and that would eliminate any "walk ins" who may show up.

Thanks!

I have been enjoying the discussion regarding children’s genealogy programming. It sounds like there are some great programs out there. We are also looking into beginning genealogy programming for kids. Please send me any worksheets or PowerPoint if you don’t mind sharing. I would like to get some ideas to develop a fun and interactive program in May.

Thanks,

We currently do basic, advanced and themed genealogy classes for adults with an occasional high school or college student and do one-on-one appointments. We have had a few requests from grandparents and home school families for classes for kids only or with their parents/grandparents so looking to create a new program.

I thank those of you who replied to my request for your fee schedules and related information. I would like to hear from more of you when you have time.

Looking at the low fees and/or lack of fees charged by several libraries/archives for various types of copies and services leads me to ask another question: How much does your organization/agency rely on fees from "outside" sources to meet budgeted expenses? If you know the percentage of your income or total budget required from fee collection, or can estimate whether it is none, some, most or all, I would like to hear from you. Also, please tell me if your fee collection goes to support a specific program or line item in your budget, or if your fee money goes into a general fund that includes other entities than yours.

Please e-mail me directly off-list at susan.c.scouras at wv.gov<mailto:susan.c.scouras at wv.gov>.

We are indexing obituaries, marriages, divorces and probate notices from our newspaper collection on microfilm and for the first time we have come across a surname that is illegible (first letter only in this case). While we are trying to cross-reference the name with other sources in the Center, we'd also like to know how other indexers handle this situation.

I too would like copies of handouts or PowerPoint etc. I've wanted to work out something perhaps with a child and adult for spring break activity. So love hearing other ideas. I've worked with boy scouts but the requirements for the merit badge are pretty minimal.

Has anyone thought of having teens come in and work on indexing projects for FamilySearch? I have a 12 year old friend and he loves doing it. His parents almost have to limit his time to get him off the computer.

We are planning a program for Cub Scouts in January and would like to see your Power Point presentation. I have had groups like this before and I feel like I?m talking over their heads. Maybe if we had a presentation they could watch instead of listening to me talk, they wouldn?t seem so bored. Would love to see what you have.

I'd also be interested in any handouts or power point programs someone has. I have been trying to figure out a way to get kids started and interested. I had thought about having a few volunteers help with a small group to help them look for things on Ancestry or Family Search...but that would entail getting information ahead of time so we can at least get back to the 1940 census - and that would eliminate any "walk ins" who may show up.

Also, a lot of genealogical societies (and historical societies) have an aging membership. It would be good for all, besides librarians, to have items that all could use in outreach programs. I give a lot of talks at libraries and would love to have age appropriate items to discuss.

I’m jumping on the bandwagon with everyone?I’d like to see your PowerPoints, handouts, activities, and anything else you can share. I will probably be teaching a class in early 2016 to homeschoolers, ages 7-12. Most of them will have parents with them. I’m a little stumped as to what to do with seven year-olds. All advice is welcome!

I'd also be interested in any handouts or power point programs someone has. I have been trying to figure out a way to get kids started and interested. I had thought about having a few volunteers help with a small group to help them look for things on Ancestry or Family Search...but that would entail getting information ahead of time so we can at least get back to the 1940 census - and that would eliminate any "walk ins" who may show up.

Thanks!

I have been enjoying the discussion regarding children's genealogy programming. It sounds like there are some great programs out there. We are also looking into beginning genealogy programming for kids. Please send me any worksheets or PowerPoint if you don't mind sharing. I would like to get some ideas to develop a fun and interactive program in May.

Does anyone do genealogy classes for kids and have tips and tricks to share? We currently do basic, advanced and themed genealogy classes for adults with an occasional high school or college student and do one-on-one appointments. We have had a few requests from grandparents and home school families for classes for kids only or with their parents/grandparents so looking to create a new program.

I'm jumping on the bandwagon with everyone! I'd like to see your PowerPoints, handouts, activities, and anything else you can share. I will probably be teaching a class in early 2016 to homeschoolers, ages 7-12. Most of them will have parents with them. I'm a little stumped as to what to do with seven year-olds. All advice is welcome!

Thanks to everyone,

Lynette it sounds like fun. Tell a couple of your fun family stories.

I tell the story of how my grandfather was picking corn but he didn’t like picking with my uncle Vernon. Vernon liked to sing and the more he sang the wilder his throw became. He would end up hitting grandpa instead of the wagon. I show them a picture of what the wagon would have looked like.

Then have a big list of questions for them to interview their parent. Bring some props or pictures to get them going.

It sounds like fun.

We use "<letter>dash" to indicate we don't know the rest OR dashes within a word so there's at least something to go on. S--, Sm--l. Others have used * or ... but dash is the current.

Have you tried putting a piece of clear yellow over the image? or otherwise using photo software? Sometimes a negative image is clearer than positive and if you can make out anything at all trying to trace the letters can sometimes help.

You could also post link to a copy of the image on the list for those who want to take a shot at it.

If you could design your own "genealogy library" in your public library - what would you like to see in it? Example, types of equipment, databases, computers, enclosed or not enclosed - temperature controlled file cabinets???

Thanks for any ideas you can send my way!

Hello Cathy:

You are welcome to come and visit our local history center for ideas on setting up a genealogy or local history room. We do not have temperature controlled display cases, although rare items are kept in a locked glass case.

We have special hours for the Local History Center: Tuesdays 1-4, Thursdays 5-8:30 and second and fourth Saturdays 10-12 and 1-4. It is always staffed by a genealogist/archivist/librarian and often a volunteer genealogist too.

Almost everything we don't have! We do have a separate enclosed genealogy room that we are rapidly outgrowing, and another large microfilm room at the other end of the floor; and city directories in yet another spot.

So what would I like?

Large (big enough to allow for expansion! We weed very little genealogy, but do keep adding), enclosed, climate-controlled room with large tables; dedicated genealogy computers loaded with Ancestry.com, FindMyPast, Fold3, Newspapers.com, GenealogyBank, Digital Sanborn Maps for the whole country (we have just our own state)...probably some others....a book scanner and a wide-format printer-copier. In an adjacent room at least 10 of the latest in microfilm reader-scanners (ScanPro3000, for example), with attached printer. Oh, and a couple of lockable display cases (we do have those). And how about all the preservation supplies I might need, just when I need them? Finally--enough trained staff to take care of everything!

If I'm going to dream....

Julie-

I have done a "What's in Your Genes?" program at my small public library here in Illinois. Aimed at early teens, I have scheduled it for the very beginning of the New Year, right when everyone at home is interested in getting out of the house! As a Genealogy merit badge counselor for Boy Scouts I have aimed my presentation to the boys completing a few of the requirements in the hour long program. Girl Scouts, to my knowledge do not have a merit badge but I did discover the first year that there is a program called American Heritage Girls (http://www.americanheritagegirls.org/) . The American Heritage program DOES offer a multi level Genealogy type merit badge.

I do have a VERY basic PowerPoint I could share?

Good luck!

I have worked both in a separate room and in an open area within regular adult circulating and reference material. I prefer the separate room. At least a unisex restroom and water fountain nearby are ideal. Close-by parking and as short a distance from the entrance to the genealogy collection would help a number of users.

One book I would not want to be without is Map guide to the U.S. Federal Censuses. 1790-1920 by William Thorndale and William Dollarhide. I would recommend getting Ancestry Library Edition and as many scanned newspaper databases as you can afford.

Dear colleagues:

Much of our research work involves reverse genealogy -- locating American descendants of Danish immigrants for patrons in Denmark. With the decreasing number of land lines, the use of unlisted numbers (particularly on the west coast, it seems) and the transition to cell phones as individuals' sole phone numbers, we are finding it increasingly difficult to track down living people. 411.com and its ilk used to be quite helpful, but now we usually get pushed over to one of several skip-tracing sites where one has to pay a fee for a lot of information we probably don't need or want to see. So, my question is: what sites do you like to use/recommend for this purpose? We resort to Facebook quite frequently, but that's the only non-standard site we've found useful. Any suggestions would be welcome.

And happy holidays to all of you out there in the trenches!

Some states have court records online now. In Minnesota, they can be found at http://pa.courts.state.mn.us/default.aspx. The information varies a bit by time period, and you don't get a person's exact address, but you can get date of birth and the city where the person lived at the time of the case, both valuable clues. Both civil (including divorces) and criminal (including traffic tickets) cases are included.

Dear colleagues:
Much of our research work involves reverse genealogy -- locating American descendants of Danish immigrants for patrons in Denmark. With the decreasing number of land lines, the use of unlisted numbers (particularly on the west coast, it seems) and the transition to cell phones as individuals' sole phone numbers, we are finding it increasingly difficult to track down living people. 411.com and its ilk used to be quite helpful, but now we usually get pushed over to one of several skip-tracing sites where one has to pay a fee for a lot of information we probably don't need or want to see. So, my question is: what sites do you like to use/recommend for this purpose? We resort to Facebook quite frequently, but that's the only non-standard site we've found useful. Any suggestions would be welcome.

And happy holidays to all of you out there in the trenches!

The free one we often use in the BU genealogy course is Veromi.net. This is a descendant of "AllBirthdays.com" and for the most part it is founded on driver's licenses.

I'm familiar with Ancestry's public records and I can see where the people search might help. I'm in a public library and we don't have a ton of requests for information, although from time to time they pop up. We don't have a subscription and most of our patrons can't afford or don't want to pay for a search, which can be frustrating. Maybe other facilities will have different experiences though.

Thanks,
Kim

Kim, the initial Veromi.net search is free. It gives you enough information to decide (age, place) if this is a good candidate for your person. You can then use other means to find a phone or address for free - depending on the place. I use a paid subscription to Peoplefinders.com, which isn't cheap except if you judge by volume. There is also a section of Ancestry.com Library edition, U.S. Public Records, which may help if your person hasn't moved in the last decade or so.

We use Reference USA, a subscription service. Zabasearch.com is free and is often helpful. Another option is, having identified a city via Switchboard or other partial-info-free site, is to refer the customer to the local library there which may have a city directory with additional info.

I have found that the information given on sites such as Veromi (and others) can then be used - with well tailored searches on Google or in other free online databases to locate more specific address information and phone numbers. For example, name+city+area code is often enough to start teasing out the rest of the digits in the phone number. It can take patience, searching the other related people as given by Veromi, logical thinking, and, in general, all the usual skills required in research, since that's what it is. And, a reasonable amount of sophistication with using a computer helps. There are lots of sites out there where information can be found, and sometimes it takes ?back door? or ?side door? approaches to getting a database to spit out the thing you want. Just like going around brick walls in regular genealogical research.

We also use Reference USA or similar products like Demographics Now or A-Z Databases (which includes mail-order subscription lists and recently moved residents). I love www.anywho.com. If I can come up with a probable county, I use their assessor, recorder of deeds, or clerk's office records to confirm the addresses I find from anywho. Even circuit court records are available in some states (including speeding tickets and parking violations). In Illinois there is CheckIllinois, but it is by subscription unless a library has it as a database. We also subscribe to Public-Records.com for the Chicagoland area. Maybe others use something similar? When all else fails I've used local newspaper's websites to look for the name in property sales and other "classifieds" type topics like marriage, divorce, etc... that may have appeared recently.

I love looking for the living! One of my favorite things. The Public Law Library of King County has a great free webinar they do every now and again on Skiptracing. It is great fun!! And, very useful, even though a lot of the emphasis is on Washington State, but we are all trained information professionals when can transfer the knowledge. I love it! Think I've taken it twice. My co-worker and I refer back to our notes from it regularly. Right now looks like they don't have anything planned for the immediate future. But, really, I can't recommend them enough. http://www.kcl1.org/

I work in a small local history collection in a small library and have had 30-40 years of news clippings donated to me. The clippings were all written by a local woman who worked for 2 newspapers in our neighboring towns. The clippings are in poor condition, most of them just shoved into folders. I know the actual newspapers are either digitized or microfilmed at the libraries in either town. The clippings are mostly about various board meetings and goings on around town. I know I am going to scan and keep the human interest type stories but do you think it is worth my time and effort to scan or even to keep the ones that do not mention anyone by name??

If the clippings were of a regular column written by the woman, or if unsigned and you are confident they are all written by her, it might be worth scanning them chronologically to document and preserve the work of that writer.

As an obsessive local historian I would like to see at least a minimal index by the name of the meeting group. It is surprising how many requests we have for organization and department histories. And, of course, they are often from papers that are neither indexed or digitized.

I would agree with Donald Wilson. You can do the human interest ones with names, but if anyone were looking for the meetings notes or goings on, they could be found by going through the papers. 30 or 40 years is a very long time to do.

And Michele has made a good point. My basic take on it, is who is going to do the index and when? If you can get volunteers and interns, by all means go for it. If a staffer is trying to do it themselves, it's a whole other kettle of fish.

I work in a small local history collection in a small library and have had 30-40 years of news clippings donated to me. The clippings were all written by a local woman who worked for 2 newspapers in our neighboring towns. The clippings are in poor condition, most of them just shoved into folders. I know the actual newspapers are either digitized or microfilmed at the libraries in either town. The clippings are mostly about various board meetings and goings on around town.

I know I am going to scan and keep the human interest type stories but do you think it is worth my time and effort to scan or even to keep the ones that do not mention anyone by name??

Thanks
Michele

For genealogical purposes, if there are no individual names, you might justify letting them go. But (depending on the kind of information in the other clippings) there may be content that would be of interest to people researching from an historical angle. For example, even something that just announces or describes a public meeting could provide a valuable clue to a researcher.

Hi, Michele,

Our library subscribes to two databases I've found helpful for locating living people: ReferenceUSA Residential Database and MergentIntellect. MergentIntellect is super creepy in that it gives many (if not all) of a person's "past" residences, too. Make sure you do a "Residential Search" so you can specify as much as you know (to limit the results). I've used this when I had to submit past residences for housing applications for myself!

Subject: [Genealib] locating living people

Dear colleagues:

Much of our research work involves reverse genealogy -- locating American descendants of Danish immigrants for patrons in Denmark. With the decreasing number of land lines, the use of unlisted numbers (particularly on the west coast, it seems) and the transition to cell phones as individuals' sole phone numbers, we are finding it increasingly difficult to track down living people. 411.com and its ilk used to be quite helpful, but now we usually get pushed over to one of several skip-tracing sites where one has to pay a fee for a lot of information we probably don't need or want to see. So, my question is: what sites do you like to use/recommend for this purpose? We resort to Facebook quite frequently, but that's the only non-standard site we've found useful. Any suggestions would be welcome.

And happy holidays to all of you out there in the trenches!

I have had some luck with intelius.com. Without paying the user does not get all the details, but sometimes it helps to narrow the field down by age, location, and family members.

If you have a college within driving distance, they may have intern programs for their history classes, and you could get some help there. They are usually young people very comfortable with scanning and indexing.

do the index and when? If you can get volunteers and interns, by all means go for it. If a staffer is trying to do it themselves, it's a whole other

If there is no solution, then there is no problem.

Dear Friends, Co-workers, Business Associates, and Volunteers:

Christmas always brings feelings of holiday memories and causes us to pause and think about our surroundings. It made me realize too that this is most likely my last Christmas at the library. At the end of next year I will be retiring. However, I will continue to volunteer my time to do local research and maybe start a museum! Retirement, what's that!! They will be asking me to leave.

I want to give my heartfelt thanks for your support and being a part of my life for the past 29 + or - years.

My Christmas gift to you is attached from 100 years ago. They are four days of Christmas cartoon strips, December 23-26, 1915 by my Grand Uncle Clare Briggs. They were published in the New York Tribune. He always had a way of sharing family moments in ways that made you chuckle.

Although I never met him or his brother (my grandfather), I know them through my research and contacts with new-found families. I learned that they contributed to my life in many ways.

I hope you get the same warm feeling when you share the holidays with your friends and families. AND, please write down the memories and share. Facebook will not keep your memories for you.

You will hear from me again, before the end of next year, but in the interim, have a wonderful holiday and the best new year!

Gratefully,

Well Drew, I do seem to recall that it took a team and you were one of them! Yes, I do remember when we talked about ways to have open communications for "those special genealogy librarians" who needed help and could not get it from their co-workers. I know I am very grateful for this list especially with Drew at the helm.

I cannot believe it has been 20 years!! I recall that we also started the pre-conference for librarians. I am hoping to be at the one in Ft Lauderdale in May. Hope to see everyone there!!

Personally, I want to thank Pam, Drew and everyone else that came up with the idea for genealib and then followed through to make it a reality. The list has been one of the most useful tools for me when I worked as a genealogy librarian. The pre-conference for librarians has also been helpful, Now that I am retired, at FGS I do Society Day instead of Librarian's Day. Both are well worth the time and energy for what is learned.

Question for those of you who provide a list of researchers available for hire (and do not endorse or recommend specific researchers): Do you list only individuals in your area, or do you list national/international research companies as well? Please reply directly to me at susan.c.scouras at wv.gov<mailto:susan.c.scouras at wv.gov>, unless others on the list express an interest.

Here at the Government & Heritage Library (part of the State Library of NC), we send them only the list of researchers that the State Archives creates and maintains. Before I became the Genealogy Reference Librarian, I talked to the head of Archives about being added to the list so I know from our conversation that in order to be added, you have to prove your competency. I never did try to get added because shortly after that, I was hired for this position.

Since you are in NC, we could send you a copy of the list, but these are all researchers in the State Archives rather than Gaston County. Alternatively, NC librarians could contact the Archives directly to be added. They update the list when information changes, such as a new person, address change, etc.

For those outside of NC, check with your State Library and State Archives to see if lists are maintained.

When I send the list, here is what I say:
"I have attached a list of researchers compiled by the State Archives of North Carolina. I cannot recommend anyone from the list, but I do know that in order to be added, researchers must prove their competency so they should all be reliable."

Responses received as of this morning:

* Three list only locals with no vetting done or recommendation given
* One lists locals who have proved competency
* One lists locals but also includes a reference to the Assn. of Professional Genealogists (APG)
* One refers only to APG
* NARA lists anyone

I would like to hear from more of you, particularly those who DO list professional firms by request. Have you had any problems? Received positive or negative reports from users?

We only list local researchers who we know are familiar with our collections and those of the surrounding area, we have an application and interview process where the potential researcher must present a copy of some recent research they have done. While we don't endorse these folks, since we list them on our website we would like to have confidence that they actually can do local research; we also require them to be members of our organization.

When we had a list, it was only of local researchers known to the library staff for many years. We did not recommend one over another. In fact, each time I gave out the list the name order was rotated so a different person was on the top of the list. At least half on the short list are no longer available for a variety of reasons, including moving out of the area.

Dear Librarians and genealogists,

The National Library of Israel hosts 2 genealogy conferences a year. The lectures from the last conference, entitled Tell Me Where You Studied And I Will Tell You Whom You Are have been uploaded to youtube and slideshare and are available here: http://web.nli.org.il/sites/NLI/English/library/services/Genealogy_New/Pages/NLI--2015-11-11--Genealogy-conference.aspx. The materials are in Hebrew. Some of our previous conferences have had English lectures, such as WWI here: http://www.slideshare.net/NliIsrael/jews-in-the-trenches.

Feel free to use, share and spread the ideas discussed in these conferences. All the best,

Hi Nancy,
I have pulled the books from the list that you requested above. Our administrative personnel who mails them is on vacation this week so they won't be sent out till next week. Let me know what periodicals you would like. They would need to be boxed separately as you already have one full box.

Thanks,
