We have used Heckman, now HF Group, for decades, with minimal problems. We had those problems within a two year period when the company was in transition, and have not had any since.

They are also the least expensive of any bindery we have contacted for current prices over the years. As a state agency we are required to obtain three bids for an order over a specified price level, and every couple of years we have to obtain prices (but not bids) from three companies. Heckman/HF Group has always been the least expensive.

HF Group also now includes ECS, the group we knew and used as Etherington Conservation, formed by Don Etherington, one of the premier conservationists in the country. We used them for several very special conservation and total rebind projects of rare books and government documents.

Colleagues,

Other than MLIS student internships, do any of you offer internship opportunities (including your societies), say for history/anthropology/communications students? If so, do you provide a stipend?

I am used to coordinating unpaid internships for my Library Marketing day job (through our university's internship program), but this is on behalf of a larger society for whom I volunteer.

Thank you,

Colleen Greene

Our staff counts the boxes as they put them away. We have some Genealogical Society members who will reshelve for themselves and report their numbers to the desk to add to our totals. Proves we're keeping busy. And you know, if it isn't counted, it is irrelevant to some managers, board members etc.

We do, but only via a generic "Greene County Room" barcode that we also use to track usage of our newspaper clippings and family files, as well as any books that don’t happen to have barcodes.

Greetings from snowy Cheyenne, Wyoming. Home of the Laramie County Library System and the Cheyenne Genealogical and Historical Society.

We have a couple of lists of duplicate books available for trade or sale. Some of the books are new and have never been off the shelves; some of the books are old and rare. I have attempted to describe and price them fairly.

We would prefer to trade books for duplicate/surplus books from your collection.

We have barcodes on all of our reels of microfilm. The most heavily used is the local paper. The newspaper is not digitized nor does the newspaper office keep back issues.

This may be helpful to some of you as well as to your patrons. There was recently a good discussion of newspaper collections and the difference among them, and their subscriptions, in an about.com genealogy article. It is at http://abt.cm/19PR0Dt

Regards
There are two separate databases available through ProQuest: NewspaperArchive and Newspapers.com Library Editions.

The Newspapers.com LE is fairly new to them, I think.
Our library recently subscribed to the Newspapers.com Library Edition for just the North Carolina newspapers (which includes most of the early papers for our town). I was confused about the titles of the databases, too, and thought I was getting quotes from one instead of the other. We eventually got that straightened out.

Their products pages for the services are:

http://www.proquest.com/products-services/newsarchive.html

From the links you can download complete title lists in an Excel format.

In comparing the two products, I liked the search and printing capabilities of Newspapers.com better. We went with that database, too, because it had a better selection of local papers for the price. Also, I noticed that NewspaperArchive seems to have more recent editions of newspapers, while Newspapers.com has mostly pre-1920s issues (there are some titles with more recent dates in Newspapers.com).

My big question is how much, if any, overlap exists between the two. We have the latter, but considering the critical value of newspapers in genealogical research, Newspapers.com would greatly expand access for our patrons if it includes papers not in NewspaperArchive. I want to check the listserv before asking Newspapers.com directly.

Each library needs to evaluate which service has more to offer for their area. In my case, that's NewspaperArchive.com. But if it looks like great coverage, check closely. For years they said that they had Oshkosh newspapers for the 1940s when they did not. They now do, but only the college weekly, not the daily general newspaper. Seems to be a copyright issue. newspapers.com has only a few early Oshkosh papers, which had been thoroughly indexed in the library long, long ago, so the information was already accessible.

We have used Heckman, now HF Group, for decades, with minimal problems. We had those problems within a two year period when the company was in transition, and have not had any since.

They are also the least expensive of any bindery we have contacted for current prices over the years. As a state agency we are required to obtain three bids for an order over a specified price level, and every couple of years we have to obtain prices (but not bids) from three companies. Heckman/HF Group has always been the least expensive.

> HF Group also now includes ECS, the group we knew and used as Etherington Conservation, formed by Don Etherington, one of the premier conservationists in the country. We used them for several very special conservation and total rebinding projects of rare books and government documents.

Colleagues,

Other than MLIS student internships, do any of you offer internship opportunities (including your societies), say for history/anthropology/communications students? If so, do you provide a stipend?

I am used to coordinating unpaid internships for my Library Marketing day job (through our university’s internship program), but this is on behalf of a larger society for whom I volunteer.

Thank you,

Am curious if any of you track use statistics for your microfilm collections. If you have stats feel free to reply to my email at jjjeffrey at denverlibrary.org
We regularly employ interns from the university's public history program in the Archives. They have been a mix of paid, unpaid, and being done for credit situations depending on the student's situation. The local historical society also uses interns from the program and offers a set stipend.

We have had all sorts of interns—all unpaid. We have utilized History, Marketing, Advertising, Animal Science, Spanish/Linguistics, English and even a Religion major. Most of what we provided was work experience. For example, the Animal Science major wanted to obtain "office" experience as all of her work experience was in a hog barn. (This is Iowa after all)

With that being said, I think interns are great. They bring a different level of energy and certainly teach me all sorts of new things. Since all of the internships are unpaid and very few are for credit, I just try to be as flexible as possible in accommodating their schedules.

We also participate in Experience Works through AARP. This program pays low income Seniors to work in non-profits and government entities so that the Seniors can gain work experience and skills. It is working well for us. The current AARP "intern" helps cover the front desk, works on special projects and also is fluent in German so she can translate documents for our patrons.

I would love to hear your opinion regarding historical books that have been classified as fiction.

I believe long ago that LOC cataloged some historical books as fiction and they continued to be that way because present generations assume it is correct.
I have about 50 Florida books that are called fiction but are based on local history. Many of the family names, places still exist today. Some even have maps, pictures that are historically correct and provide new insights to the area. Through the years, we have cataloged them in 813, 813.5 or .6, etc.

Now, the present cataloger would like them placed in Fiction ("F"). I realize it is about the same thing. Dewey definition of 813 is "American fiction in English." I must be missing something because I am not a cataloger and try not to think like one. <g>

I have always felt these type of books are valuable because the authors often are from the area and write about experiences they know. For example: "Cross Creek" by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings. It is classified as fiction. (Look at WorldCat.) Yes, it is a story, but about her life experiences near her home.

Your thoughts?

Fiction is fiction, no matter how much of the book is factual. If I have a book that is questionable, first think I do is look for dialogue. If I find a conversation between two characters that is presented with quotation marks, etc., unless there is a footnote indicating where the conversation was recorded or what document is being quoted, then the book is fiction.

The key is to be sure your cataloger puts in subject headings that will help patrons and librarians find historical fiction. Most libraries use OCLC cataloging in one way or another, or cataloging records available from their book dealers. If the fiction work does not have headings such as "Indian River Co. x Florida x History v Fiction" or Smith, John v Biography v Fiction" or something including "Historical fiction," depending on the type of subject headings your library uses, then ask your cataloger to add them.

I have to empathize with your cataloger. I was our sole cataloger until a year ago. I'm now training my replacement and will continue to catalog some myself. I didn't train as a cataloger, but I needed to do it here. Categorizing as Fiction is so much easier and quicker than trying to define the 800 number, etc.!

I strongly believe that these books should be classified as fiction because some readers will take every word as fact. Having said that, you can have reading lists or other guides that urge people to read these stories to get a feel for the history and background of your community.

I may have misled you. We have these books in our Florida Archive room, but we are using the 813 number, which to me is the same as fiction, right? I do not see a reason to take time to move all of these books to "F" when they are already processed and have subject headings.

I tried to say that many of the books are actual accounts of our history, but in story form.

I vote for keeping them in the Florida history room.

This is what we do with "larger-than-life" figures from our area such as Johnny Appleseed, Betty Zane, and Lew Wetzel. Their fictionalized histories are in Local History & Genealogy rather than the regular collection.

Our museum offers paid internships for Danish graduate students in a number of fields, including library science, history, marketing and museum studies. Usually a semester in length, we provide a $500/month stipend, free housing in town, and (since we’re 15 miles from anywhere and there’s no public transportation), access to a vehicle for personal use. We usually have 2 at a time. The funding for the internships comes from an outside private source. Over the past decade the interns have enriched our museum/library and expanded our knowledge base in many different ways.

I apologize if I sound like a harridan on this subject, but I have a very strong opinion on this issue.

I have to emphasize again that from a historian's point of view, this type of book is fiction, not history. Historical fiction is just that, fiction based on history, but still fiction. The general public is not going to realize that if the book is classified in Dewey 800's because few know what Dewey means these days, if they ever did. Everyone knows "F" is fiction. They need to understand the distinction, and without talking to a librarian, they won't know.

I have never seen historical fiction without dialogue or a "re-creation" of events outlining a person's actions, and an imaginary conversation or interaction between two people who actually lived the experience is still fiction, because the conversation or interaction as written never happened, and is therefore not history. It is a story based on history, but it is a story, not history. Other than the fictional dialogue, the ordinary reader does not know what in the book is history based on primary documents, or what is from the author's imagination. Students of all ages are even less likely to realize this.

Keep them in the Florida Room, but in a Fiction section.

I am recommending this based on my history degree and my MLS with experience as a cataloger, and 16 years of working with solely genealogy and history patrons, ranging from the general public to Social Studies Fair projects to graduate theses researchers and to professors and professional writers of non-fiction and fiction. No legitimate historian will cite historical fiction as a reference of historical fact. A historian will use the bibliography and/or notes in a novel based on history for further research in primary documents regarding the subject. No competent teacher or professor will knowingly accept a citation or quotation in a term paper or thesis as fact if it is drawn from historical fiction.

I would love to hear your opinion regarding historical books that have been classified as fiction.

I believe long ago that LOC cataloged some historical books as fiction and they continued to be that way because present generations assume it is correct.
I have about 50 Florida books that are called fiction but are based on local history. Many of the family names, places still exist today. Some even have maps, pictures that are historically correct and provide new insights to the area. Through the years, we have cataloged them in 813, 813.5 or .6, etc.

Now, the present cataloger would like them placed in Fiction ("F"). I realize it is about the same thing. Dewey definition of 813 is "American fiction in English." I must be missing something because I am not a cataloger and try not to think like one. <g>

I have always felt these type of books are valuable because the authors often are from the area and write about experiences they know. For example: "Cross Creek" by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings. It is classified as fiction. (Look at WorldCat.) Yes, it is a story, but about her life experiences near her home.

Your thoughts?

I apologize if I sound like a harridan on this subject, but I have a very strong opinion on this issue.

I have to emphasize again that from a historian?s point of view, this type of book is fiction, not history. Historical fiction is just that, fiction based on history, but still fiction. The general public is not going to realize that if the book is classified in Dewey 800s because few know what Dewey means these days, if they ever did. Everyone knows ?F? is fiction. They need to understand the distinction, and without talking to a librarian, they won?t know.

I have never seen historical fiction without dialogue or a ?re-creation? of events outlining a person?s actions, and an imaginary conversation or interaction between two people who actually lived the experience is still fiction, because the conversation or interaction as written never happened, and is therefore not history. It is a story based on history, but it is a story, not history. Other than the fictional dialogue, the ordinary reader does not know what in the book is history based on primary documents, or what is from the author?s imagination.
Students of all ages are even less likely to realize this.

Keep them in the Florida Room, but in a Fiction section.
I am recommending this based on my history degree and my MLS with experience as a cataloger, and 16 years of working with solely genealogy and history patrons, ranging from the general public to Social Studies Fair projects to graduate theses researchers and to professors and professional writers of non-fiction and fiction. No legitimate historian will cite historical fiction as a reference of historical fact. A historian will use the bibliography and/or notes in a novel based on history for further research in primary documents regarding the subject. No competent teacher or professor will knowingly accept a citation or quotation in a term paper or thesis as fact if it is drawn from historical fiction.

I strongly believe that these books should be classified as fiction because some readers will take every word as fact. Having said that, you can have reading lists

I must definitely agree with Susan's remarks based on a similar background. With over 20 years of cataloging in addition to reference earlier, I've tirelessly worked to make sure even the smallest of libraries cataloged their local history/genealogy.

> Keep them in your Florida room, but keep them marked as fiction, whether it's as FIC or 813... They still have clues and with in humanizing stories, just not for historical/genealogical research to be cited.

> Current cataloging standards make it clear that "true stories" using unsubstantiated dialogue are actually "Fictionalized", which days it all. (These are my version of the standards, not an exact depiction).

> Personally, I'd use FIC rather than the Dewey or LC number because it's the clearest for our customers.

> Most definitely add all the valid subject headings followed by $v Fiction that you can. Notes, when appropriate, in the 59x field can help highlight pertinent topics, too!

Just want to support what Susan said. I am not a cataloger, but we try to keep all our Maryland fiction under F. Not to say that some might not have snuck its way into the 800s, but if it does we move it. There is some poetry there, but people know what that is when they see it. :) We don't do our own cataloging, but have an incredibly supportive technical services department. Keeping such books in a separate fiction section, I believe, also helps with browsers. As Susan said, almost every patron understands the difference between a book with an F on it and a book with a number. Fiction -- Not fiction. I have nothing but the greatest faith in all our patrons, but putting fiction anywhere else but in a separate fiction section, I believe, it just asking for trouble. :) Also, might make it more difficult for any subs or new volunteers you have working reference and don't know a "fictional account" shelved in Dewey just by its title or author. Excuse me now, while I go scan my shelves for stray fiction. :)

Here's a perfect example of the fiction/nonfiction divide: Laura Ingalls Wilder. The recent Pioneer Girl annotated autobiography is non-fiction. The series by Laura starting with Little House in the Big Woods are fiction.

Death of the Prairie by Kathleen Ernst is a mystery featuring Chloe Ellefson, who works at Old World Wisconsin, a living history museum. Chloe has written a paper arguing that Laura's description of such activities as hog butchering are of sufficient quality to be useful to the interpretive staff. She heads for DeSmet to present this paper, visiting LIW museums along the way, and learns that many of the museums have difficulty convincing customers that the children's books are not 100% accurate, and the TV series even less so!

I strongly believe that these books should be classified as fiction because some readers will take every word as fact. Having said that, you can have reading lists or other guides that urge people to read these stories to get a feel for the history and background of your community.

Now, the present cataloger would like them placed in Fiction (?F?). I realize it is about the same thing. Dewey definition of 813 is ?American fiction in English.? I must be missing something because I am not a cataloger and try not to think like one. <g>

I have always felt these type of books are valuable because the authors often are from the area and write about experiences they know. For example: ?Cross Creek? by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings. Another prime example is the writing of Allan W. Eckert. His books are well-researched, most have a bibliography and some have an index. Eckert, however, uses what he calls "narrative" to describe his use of created dialogue in an otherwise factual sequence. He uses "A Narrative" often as a subtitle. There has been much argument among historians as to whether his books are fact or fiction, or are fact but with fictionalized sections. This is where the "dialogue rule" comes in. If there is author-created conversation, then the work is fiction. However, you will find his books assigned as reading for college history classes, and cataloged as history in some university libraries.

Pam,
I think it would depend on if your library puts any other fiction in the 800s. Our library made the decision to move all of our classics out of the 800s and put them in the fiction section since patrons tended to go there anyway. I don?\textapos;t disagree with Susan, but I think it is whatever is best practice for your library. Maybe your cataloger has made the decision to move all fiction out of that section as well? I apologize if I sound like a harridan on this subject, but I have a very strong opinion on this issue.

I have to emphasize again that from a historian’s point of view, this type of book is fiction, not history. Historical fiction is just that, fiction based on history, but still fiction. The general public is not going to realize that if the book is classified in Dewey 800s because few know what Dewey means these days, if they ever did. Everyone knows “F” is fiction. They need to understand the distinction, and without talking to a librarian, they won’t know.

I have never seen historical fiction without dialogue or a “re-creation” of events outlining a person’s actions, and an imaginary conversation or interaction between two people who actually lived the experience is still fiction, because the conversation or interaction as written never happened, and is therefore not history. It is a story based on history, but it is a story, not history. Other than the fictional dialogue, the ordinary reader does not know what in the book is history based on primary documents, or what is from the author’s imagination. Students of all ages are even less likely to realize this.

Keep them in the Florida Room, but in a Fiction section.

I am recommending this based on my history degree and my MLS with experience as a cataloger, and 16 years of working with solely genealogy and history patrons, ranging from the general public to Social Studies Fair projects to graduate thesis researchers and to professors and professional writers of non-fiction and fiction. No legitimate historian will cite historical fiction as a reference of historical fact. A historian will use the bibliography and/or notes in a novel based on history for further research in primary documents regarding the subject. No competent teacher or professor will knowingly accept a citation or quotation in a term paper or thesis as fact if it is drawn from historical fiction.

I may have misled you. We have these books in our Florida Archive room, but we are using the 813 number, which to me is the same as fiction, right? I do not see a reason to take time to move all of these books to ?F? when they are already processed and have subject headings.

I tried to say that many of the books are actual accounts of our history, but in story form.

Some years back, there was quite a kerfuffle over a biography of President Reagan. The author, Edmund Morris (Dutch: a memoir of Ronald Reagan), not only created dialogue, but he also inserted fictional characters into the narrative.

It was particularly strange, because this was the first (only?) "authorized" biography.

I agree with the consensus that all the fiction should be consistently cataloged - as Fiction or in the 800s. I also agree that invented dialogue makes a work fiction. My only exception would be a nonfiction book that informs the reader that one or more characters has been renamed to protect their privacy.

Hey all,

I've been asked by the local community college to teach a course on the basics of genealogy. Does anyone on the listserv have any experience teaching genealogy in a college setting, or know where to find information about course requirements? Any other information/advice would be greatly appreciated.

Michael,

I currently teach genealogy at the University of Illinois GSLIS, but I have taught both basic and intermediate level genealogy courses through the local community college in the past. RUSA has guidelines for genealogical instruction that are here: http://www.ala.org/rusa/resources/guidelines/guidelinesunit. I do have more ideas for you, so perhaps you will email me? nwmiller at illinois.edu

ALA has ?Guidelines for a Unit or Course of Instruction in Genealogical Research at Schools of Library and Information Science? at http://www.ala.org/rusa/resources/guidelines/guidelinesunit that may offer some advice.

Also, our local community college offered such a course several years ago using ?Genealogy for Dummies? as the textbook.

Hey all,

I've been asked by the local community college to teach a course on the basics of genealogy. Does anyone on the listserv have any experience teaching genealogy in a college setting, or know where to find information about course requirements? Any other information/advice would be greatly appreciated.

Very exciting!! Can I ask what department you are teaching that out of? I am very jealous!!

I teach at the UofMaryland iSchool. First time, I leaned very heavy on the RUSA guidelines. I am not technically a librarian, just a volunteer for our Lake County IL G.S. but have taught several Girl Scout Troops for their My Heritage Badge. I begin with asking "What is your grandmother's original name (maiden name)". Blank stares all around.
Then they realize they build out from themselves and find family info that they had been oblivious to.

I didn't realize what my grandmother's name was until she died! Only on the prayer card did it tell me her actual name. Her sister had Americanized her name in business and so I thought that was the family name. Also she was called by a nickname all her life so I didn't realize that Mame was actually Mary Ann!

This is a great starting point, no matter the age of your audience.

Although revised in 2004 and 2007, the footnotes section 13.0 seems to go with the original 1995 article, and after 21 years, some of those thoughts could be cited with more modern references. The works by Elizabeth Shown Mills, which are now used extensively in the genealogical community for better or worse, are not mentioned at all.

Online resources, free and fee-based, have taken over, and training is needed in usage of these tools, including such things as how to rate them? both the vendors and the product, search techniques, how to take advantage of image software to get a good reproduction, etc. Needs a separate new section.

My opinion only!

Tom Neel, Library Director

Ohio Genealogical Society
ALA has Guidelines for a Unit or Course of Instruction in Genealogical Research at Schools of Library and Information Science? at http://www.alao rg/rusa/resources/guidelines/guidelinesunit that may offer some advice.

Also, our local community college offered such a course several years ago using Genealogy for Dummies? as the textbook.

It has been awhile since I have been able to attend History Section meetings but, I believe, that the guidelines are in the midst of being rewritten. I also believe that several of the folks who are working on them are on this list. Hopefully, someone can confirm this or correct me. :) If they are not being reworked now they soon will be. As probably many of us know, ALA guidelines are regularly updated. It is a long tiring process! It is a combination of herding cats and making sausage. Thus, the three years between the revision date and when they were approved by the RUSA Board. Also, the gap in dates of sources, though "Evidence!: Citation & Analysis for the Family Historian" is listed in footnote 5 and there are certainly post-1995 copyright dates given. :) As part of that process, the guidelines are also vetted among the appropriate groups. If I am remembering correctly, the last time the guidelines were written they were posted here for comment. I hope that when next they come our way folks will take the time to read them and offer comment.

I was History Section Chair when these last went through the process and the RUSA Board was very impressed with the work on the committee. I was not on the committee, so can take no credit, I just had to shepherd the guidelines through the RUSA Board. But, I will say that the committee did an extraordinary job. This guidelines are used by people, as is obvious from the discussion here. They do serve a purpose in our profession and comments are welcome and will be read. So, keep any eye out!

Subject: [Genealib] Genealogy Courses at Community College

Hey all,

I've been asked by the local community college to teach a course on the basics of genealogy. Does anyone on the listserv have any experience teaching genealogy in a college setting, or know where to find information about course requirements? Any other information/advice would be greatly appreciated.

Ancestry posted a banner starting a few days ago announcing that there would be intermittent interruptions for maintenance starting this morning (Sunday) at midnight eastern time, and that it should last no more than 30 minutes. I'm on the east coast and I got the “sorry, not available?” message intermittently yesterday when trying to connect to a variety of type of resources starting much earlier than midnight. I hope it has cleared up by now!

It's Super Bowl Sunday (Go Panthers, since they are from NC!) and I have to work this cold, rainy day.

So, I cleared a file drawer full of periodicals which I am now offering for postage to any takers.

The attached list includes a list by Periodical Title, a list by State, and a list of NGS Newsletters.

These were the property of a now defunct genealogy society in our area and were exchanges, or attempts to get the society to exchange, so full runs are spotty.

As I clean other drawers, I may have more to offer.

Please reply off list to either KellenbergerRoom at gmail.com or vtjones at nbccpl.org.

Here in Akron, Ohio, we've digitized the Wingfoot Clan newsletters of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. from 1939-1946, accessed through Summit Memory:

You might also try Hagley in Wilmington, Delaware. Here's a link to a description of the archives and library collections there: http://www.hagley.org/collection-overview. Hagley has done quite a bit of digitizing of late, so may have some that you can use. It is the repository for the records of the DuPont companies and other companies in the Mid-Atlantic region, as well as some national ones. I don't research companies all that much, but have used Hagley materials in other research. The archivists are very helpful.

I'm trying to find examples of collections of company employee magazines that have been digitized. Here are a few examples:

Employee magazines of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway (?The Frisco?), 1902-1935: http://thelibrary.org/lochist/frisco/magazines/magazines.cfm

Illinois Central Employees' Magazine, 1914-1924: http://www.library.illinois.edu/blog/digitizedbotw/2007/10/illinois_central_employe
Are these magazines also referred to as "house organs"?

We are four issues short of having a good full several-years' run of the genealogical journal of the Phillips Co. (KS) Genealogical Society, Tree Trackers, which we would love to get bound. Does anyone have unneeded copies of the following issues? We'd be happy to pay postage.

The Osher Lifelong Learning Institute at Duke University offers 6 different genealogy courses. Genealogy 1 is a prerequisite for some of the advanced courses. The courses have about twenty contact hours each. They begin with a general genealogy course and end with a course in which students interpret the information in their own DNA.
Below are the Genealogy Courses being taught at the College of DuPage Continuing Education Dept. for Spring 2016

Ancestry and Family Search

This course provides an introduction to the two major genealogy research websites. Join Rose Lehne in learning how to use their features and get started on your own research! Thursday, March 31 1-3 p.m. HUMNT-0001-070, $29; Lifelong Learner $19 Student Resource Center (SRC), Room 1118

An Irish Maiden's Voyage

The Titanic sank more than 100 years ago this spring. Join genealogy expert Rose Lehne as she tracks down the genealogical documents for a local Titanic survivor. Thursday, April 28 1-3 p.m. HUMNT-0001-073, $29; Lifelong Learner $19 Student Resource Center (SRC), Room 1118

Climb Your Family Tree

Learn what types of genealogical records to search for and where and how to record what you find. Online and paper sources are explored with instructor Rose Lehne, who has been researching her own family history for more than 15 years. Thursday, March 3 1-3 p.m. HUMNT-0001-072, $29; Lifelong Learner $19 Student Resource Center (SRC), Room 1125

Genealogy at the Library

Researching at the library doesn't mean you have to print each search result. Learn to use email or a flash drive to save your results, and explore other digital storage options. Thursday, April 14 1-3 p.m. HUMNT-0001-071, $29; Lifelong Learner $19 On campus in Glen Ellyn

Genealogy for Digital Images Rose Lehne shows you how to enhance your digital genealogy records using metadata. Add the 'who, what, where, when, why and how' to your digital records. Thursday, May 19 1-3 p.m.
HUMNT-0001-037, $29; Lifelong Learner $19 On campus in Glen Ellyn

House History

Research the history of your family home! Learn to search local records for this important piece of family history. Thursday, May 12 1-3 p.m.

Hey all,

I've been asked by the local community college to teach a course on the basics of genealogy. Does anyone on the listserv have any experience teaching genealogy in a college setting, or know where to find information about course requirements? Any other information/advice would be greatly appreciated.

They are a legitimate company. Great records from eastern Europe and many Jewish records. I am sure others will have additional information.

If you do the trial membership be sure to cancel well before the 14 days.
I logged in to cancel on the 14th day (I really didn't see any reason to keep it) and was already charged $119. It took several phone calls to have a refund issued.

Good luck-- Susan

There is a library edition that all Nebraska libraries have now courtesy of the Nebraska Library Commission—it has replaced HeritageQuest in our "bundle" of databases. On the whole we are pretty pleased with it. Many international records (Swedish household censuses, for example, which are a goldmine if you are doing Swedish research), and all the US censuses; and they seem to add new records pretty frequently.

We have had a few slightly moldy books donated to our library. I do book repairs at our library as well as reference. It's very important that moldy books be separated from the collection because mold can spread like wildfire to other books. Our library bags them until we can treat them. Sun light can kill mold spores. My former supervisor would take the moldy books home over the weekend and lay out the books in the sun as my apartment does not get much sunlight and it is not recommended to leave them in the sun outside the library. The issue with leaving them out in the sun, of course, is preservation - direct sunlight can cause deterioration in books. I look at like a scale - on one hand, you can toss out the book because it has mold, or you can try and treat it, even if it might cause deterioration through direct sunlight.

Cornell University has a good article - https://www.library.cornell.edu/preservation/librarypreservation/mee/management/mold.html

Also, the NEDCC offers suggestions for combatting the smell - https://www.nedcc.org/free-resources/ask-nedcc/faqs

Just curious to hear what people do with moldy donations. We have received a few interesting items that have been donated recently that suffer from light to heavy mold. The badly moldy or smelly ones I tend to discard immediately, but the less damaged ones I have in a back storage area until I can go through them and make a decision.

The mold discussion reminded me of a useful item for cleaning the exterior of books:

The Gonzo Revolutionary Pet Hair Lifter!
www.magicamerican.com

6 x 3x 1 3/8" "sponge"

I cut it into smaller pieces, usually cut in half lengthwise and cut each half in fifths.

Use dry, never wet. Gently wipe surface of cover and even the closed edges of pages to remove dust and dirt. If the surface can stand a little rubbing, you can remove light stains and heavier deposits of dust or dirt. Turn the sponge to a clean side as needed.

I have used on paper covers just as often as cloth and vinyl, but have to be extra careful, particularly around the edges, so no tears. If one is extremely careful it can be used to clean a paper page or document, but I would only try this if the paper was not salvageable otherwise. Works best on coated paper, of course. I have saved a few grimy pamphlets this way.

The sponge is washable, but I toss the used pieces since they are usually black with grime and I don't want to chance transferring dirt or anything else from one book to another through inadequate washing.
I think a former staff member learned about this sponge in a conservation class.

National genealogy conferences rarely come to Florida (the last was in 2003), so you'll want to take advantage of the annual NGS Conference in Fort Lauderdale in early May.

Associated with that conference, ProQuest is sponsoring a free all-day event just for genealogy librarians. Lunch is included.

Note: You do not have to register for the NGS Conference itself in order to register for Librarians Day!

To learn more about this event, go to:
http://conference.ngsgenealogy.org/librarians-day/

Space is limited, so please register soon!

Subject: [Genealib] bibliographies or checklists for genealogy collections development?
Message-ID: <5F0AE8E7FF17E24493B8340C333108361A2DE453@Dash1.cabarrus.local>

Good afternoon!

As someone newly responsible for collections development for a small local history and genealogy room, I am curious about what list members might suggest in the way of a bibliography / checklist / core collection list to inform collections development decisions.

My most immediate need is for a reference that I could use to evaluate potential donations related to bordering states, states along the migration pathways to our state, and ancestral ethnicities that are common in our area. (For us, this equates to resources on researching German and Scots-Irish ancestry, and geographic areas including Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, and Tennessee.) These are secondary areas of our collection where our goal would be to have a small collection of the most important works, but not collect in great depth. I have a list of potential donations in these areas that I need to make decisions on without spending a lot of time doing individual evaluation of. What should I consult for a quick take on whether a particular title is one of the most important for that region?

I would welcome any advice, on- or off-list.

Meanwhile if you are keeping in your library's collection any of the periodicals listed in the attachment and may be missing some to complete the series, we hope you will check our duplicates list and request any you are missing and desire to receive for just the mailing cost.

I will be working ten hour days for early voting 29 Feb to 12 Mar and the 15 Mar presidential primary election, so please respond to me off list at f1rova at mchsi.com, and beginning Wednesday 16 March I will begin pulling the ones you request on a first-to-respond/first-to-receive basis, and will respond to you with an emailed list of the ones you will be receiving. We ask that when you later receive the periodical(s), you note the postage cost and send to me at the below address a check for the postage cost made payable to "WFGS" and annotate on the check "For the book fund". We need issues of NEHGR. Are you offering them in the sets as listed only? Or can I request individual scattered issues?

If by set only, I would take the first set listed.

If we can request specific issues, we need the following whole # issues:
147
582-590
592-595
600
604
607
618-620
625-636
654-655

We can't afford a subscription. We used to get free it in exchange for the journal we published, West Virginia History, but the powers-that-be gave the journal to West Virginia University several years ago. We have enough patrons with New England heritage that we try to collect enough donated issues and accept offers such as yours to fill in our gaps and gain the newer issues. Our "friends" group, Mining Your History Foundation, will write a check for postage.

Thanks,
Susan

My apologies for not paying attention and replying to the list instead of off-line just now.

I will take the opportunity, though, to remind everyone that West Virginia Archives and History has a YouTube channel where we post selected audio/video clips and full features from our collection, as well as most of our in-house lectures on a wide variety of West Virginia-related topics. Some may be a surprise to you, such as a lecture about filmmaker Ellis Dungan, a West Virginian who made films in India before there was a Bollywood, and film clips from his work. Others, such as West Virginia Heritage Music, will appeal to anyone who enjoys old time music and folk music. We also have genealogy how-to workshops led by DAR members. Flintlock Rifles in West Virginia features rifles in the West Virginia State Museum collection and was presented by experts in the field, including a re-enactor and gunsmith.

Michigan genealogy librarians and researchers - the Michigan Genealogical Council is seeking nominees for the 2016 Lucy Mary Kellogg Award and is asking for your help in getting the word out!

As genealogy and local history librarians, we are often uniquely connected to our communities. If you know of someone who is active in your area, is a member of one of the MGC societies, and deserves recognition for their hard work and contributions to local history and genealogy resources, please consider nominating them or passing this information on to someone in your local genealogical or historical society.

Since 1992, the Michigan Genealogical Council has offered the Lucy Mary Kellogg award as a way to honor the rich genealogical contributions brought to our community by dedicated members of Michigan's genealogical societies. Named for the first woman and first Midwesterner to be chosen for the National Genealogy Hall of Fame, the award allows us to celebrate our most active members for their service.

The award has been given to twenty individuals since its creation, generating hundreds of dollars in donations to local societies, the Library of Michigan, and the Archives of Michigan. Because of a recent drop in submissions, the last Lucy Mary Kellogg award was granted in 2012 and we need help bringing attention to the award to receive enough submissions to continue recognizing the valuable offerings brought by our members. To gather judges and award the 2016 Lucy Mary Kellogg award, we need to receive a minimum of three submissions by June 1st.

To nominate someone for the award you just submit a brief nomination form and a letter of recommendation (up to 500 words) which lists the individual's achievements and contributions. Societies are encouraged to solicit multiple letters of recommendation from groups or individuals familiar with the nominee and their work. As with research - the more evidence, the better!

Please visit our website <http://www.mimgc.org/cpage.php?pt=14> for a list of requirements and our nomination form. Questions can be emailed to info at mimgc.org or johnsonc at yourmdl.org.

Thank you for your time, and have a great week!
