With more societies opting to publish electronically how are you handling these resources? Is there a genealogy serial electronic service similar to Zinio or Flipster?

I would be interested in the answers to this as well. The GS that I am president of only does a electronic version now, and we do not have an agreement with any other entity to distribute the newsletter. And for 15 years I was also the serials librarian at my old library - I am aware of the various channels.

Each issue can easily be uploaded to Internet Archive; Scribd; Pinterest ... blog site etc. These destinations can easily be cataloged by any library and made instantly retrievable 24/7 via their online catalog with the click of a mouse.

Tom, can you explain in better detail how these online outlets would work as third party services between genealogy societies and libraries?

The decision to use these online services would have to come from the society. Libraries can’t just take digital genealogy society periodicals and upload them to whatever platform they choose without permission. Some genealogy societies see newsletter access as a benefit of membership and might not want open online access through Internet Archive. Is there a way to restrict it on Internet Archive? Some societies publish newsletters through a website or blog, which can be password protected, but then the local library would need to have access to that password. As far as I can tell, Scribd requires an account and looks like it’s a paid service. If that’s the case, who creates the account and pays for the subscription fee? the society or the library? It strikes me that this is more complicated than it looks at first glance.

Correct Jane.

I am suggesting that for those publications that societies put online, freely available to anyone to read - that libraries should create online catalog records for this content - making it super-easy for our patrons to simply click and read the issues anytime 24/7.

Libraries would not be scanning or uploading anything - simply cataloging the content that - in their determination - their readers want to know about - that is free online. Cataloging these online items ... digital books, serials etc. is a terrific way to make these resources easily available to our users. Use the 856 field to add in the hyperlink. Very easy to do.

Some gen and historical societies routinely put digital copies of their backfiles online ... free to anyone.
Simply create a catalog record for the serial title (or any digital item) - including the critical 856 hyperlink) and our readers can click & read the content on their schedule.

Same concept would apply to digital books (town histories, genealogies etc.); videos (cemetery tours, local history site tours etc.) that are free online - any titles that are essential for your audience - catalog those free online titles (Google Book, Internet Archive, YouTube etc.) and make them instantly retrievable. Instead of pointing our users to these silo sites - we catalog the individual titles and made them instantly findable/readable right from the online catalog.

Simple to do. It takes just a few minutes to create each record.

I agree wholeheartedly with what Katheryn Carrier said. Tracking charges and payments would take more time and effort than actually looking up the obituary and mailing/emailing it. It irritates the heck out of me that libraries charge for genealogy reference services when they would never dream of charging for other reference services.

One of the great challenges Genealogy Librarians face in the digital age is the storage and archiving of electronic materials. We are the collective memory of the genealogy community. Our first responsibility is to our local, state and regional societies. The challenge has been ensuring that serials of genealogical and local history nature are around for future generations. These are the same titles that for decades have been housed and bound on the shelves of the local library are now in electronic format. That in itself challenges us, the keepers of history, to archive these materials. For too long librarians have simply printed out the electronic version and eventually bound them as though this were normative.

However, when things are born digitally there needs to be a concerted response from the community to make sure that these digital items do not simply evaporate with an electronic expiration date. Linking to the societies digital archives is an excellent stop gap. It is useful as long as the web address is stable. Too often societies switch jobbers and either lose their digital archives or successfully migrate to the new platform. We are thus in a constant state of verifying broken links. This holds true not only for external links but, yes, on occasion, here at the DPL, our own digital resources.

We all know the arguments and conversation about access. Either we are dealing with gatekeepers who believe, rightly or wrongly, that it is the right of membership only access as opposed to putting it out there for the world to see as inducement and advertisement and it will draw in new members. What, if any, is the difference to having current and bound issues on our shelves and acting as an e-forum for the world of genealogy and local history periodical literature? Once we are over that hurdle the serial materials of the community may no longer be treated as electronic-ephemera but as something to be as treasured as print materials.

I am appreciating this thread. We never charged for this years ago and suggested a "donation" to cover copy and mailing costs. However, we rarely, if ever received a donation. Being a medium-sized county library this wasn't acceptable. So now we charge $3 per lookup. This does cover the cost of postage and photocopying but it doesn't come close to covering my time. My time is paid for by the property tax payers of this county. This doesn't necessarily mean that we should give away free service to those who are from out-of-county. Anyone who lives in the county does get this service for free if they want information emailed to them. If not, they pay 10 cents a page. I guess it all depends on what state laws allows a non-profit organization to do. I've only had one person respond to the fees negatively. Most are happy and many send more than is necessary on purpose. As for tracking charges, I put what I receive in the daily money drawer and write down the amount under "fines and fees." The administrative assistant does the rest. I just wish we had a portal for receiving funds online as many requests come in to me that way.

This is along the lines of what I've been thinking, James. It's more complicated than linking to freely accessible digital journals. What about the ones that are not? And with thousands of society publications, libraries, and multiple online platforms, the possible combinations and time spent keeping up with them is unsustainable. There needs to be a more central point of access.

I'd be interested to know what Allen County PL might have to say about this, since they administer PERSI and have a better handle on genealogy periodicals, and I think the FHL might have some useful input. Another thought I've had is a database similar to Genealogy Connect.

In the end, though, it will require cooperation from genealogy societies to work with whatever entities may emerge to ensure that libraries to continue to be open repositories for their publications.

We are also facing a problem of archiving obituaries that are no longer published in newspapers, but only appearing on a funeral home website? but that's a discussion for a different day.

One of the great challenges Genealogy Librarians face in the digital age is the storage and archiving of electronic materials. We are the collective memory of the genealogy community. Our first responsibility is to our local, state and regional societies. The challenge has been ensuring that serials of genealogical and local history nature are around for future generations. These are the same titles that for decades have been housed and bound on the shelves of the local library are now in electronic format.
That in itself challenges us, the keepers of history, to archive these books, serials etc. is a terrific way to make these resources easily available to our users. Use the 856 field to add in the hyperlink. Very easy to do.

Some gen and historical societies routinely put digital copies of their backfiles online ... free to anyone.

Simply create a catalog record for the serial title (or any digital item) - including the critical 856 hyperlink) and our readers can click & read the content on their schedule.

Same concept would apply to digital books (town histories, genealogies etc.); videos (cemetry tours, local history site tours etc.) that are free online - any titles that are essential for your audience - catalog those free online titles (Google Book, Internet Archive, YouTube etc.) and make them instantly retrievable. Instead of pointing our users to these silo sites - we catalog the individual titles and made them instantly findable/readable right from the online catalog.

Simple to do. It takes just a few minutes to create each record.

Tom, can you explain in better detail how these online outlets would work as third party services between genealogy societies and libraries?

The decision to use these online services would have to come from the society. Libraries can?t just take digital genealogy society periodicals and upload them to whatever platform they choose without permission. Some genealogy societies see newsletter access as a benefit of membership and might not want open online access through Internet Archive. Is there a way to restrict it on Internet Archive? Some societies publish newsletters through a website or blog, which can be password protected, but then the local library would need to have access to that password. As far as I can tell, Scribd requires an account and looks like it?as a paid service. If that?as the case, who creates the account and pays for the subscription fee? the society or the library? It strikes me that this is more complicated than it looks at first glance.

Thanks Tom!

I had almost forgotten about those. Back when I was cataloging serials we didn't even have an online catalog, only paper cards....

Each issue can easily be uploaded to Internet Archive; Scribd; Pinterest ...

These destinations can easily be cataloged by any library and made instantly retrievable 24/7 via their online catalog with the click of a mouse.

I would be interested in the answers to this as well. The GS that I am president of only does a electronic version now, and we do not have an agreement with any other entity to distribute the newsletter. And for 15 years I was also the serials librarian at my old library - I am aware of the various channels.

With more societies opting to publish electronically how are you handling these resources? Is there a genealogy serial electronic service similar to Zinio or Flipster?

Hello everyone,

For a few years, I have been building a website to help researchers find out how much an ancestor might have earned in any occupation throughout American history. The website also indicates the buying power of ancestors' earnings by telling how much it would have cost to buy certain food items, articles of clothing, a ticket on a passenger railroad, etc., at the time (and sometimes in the place) that they lived. The site links to almost exclusively to authoritative government publications, so you can confidently cite sources.

http://libraryguides.missouri.edu/pricesandwages/home

Please feel free to contact me if you cannot find something. I have access to many more sources than are currently listed on the website, and I am slowly working at getting them all added.
Special thanks go out to our friends at the St. Louis Federal Reserve Digital Library (FRASER) who have been so supportive of this project.

Marie, thank you for this fantastic web site! I will refer to it in a couple of talks I’m giving; one about using estate inventories and one about colonial money.

I am considering accepting an invite to speak at a history conference in 2018. This would only be for 5 minutes, and then I would be part of a round table.

I am writing to ask if any of you have done something similar to that. Part of the notice is: [the chairperson] will be talking about local historical societies and their involvement in local politics, and another participant will be discussing how natural disasters impact local memory in ways that affect local political discourse. I am deciding about what to say on how area students or other residents are using (or could use) the area's local history to foster particular kinds of political and social change on the local level?
I do have some ideas, but am asking the larger group to help jog my memory. Thanks very much!

Larry,

What about tying in local history with local environmental issues? Something like using local history resources when restoring a stream to try to determine its former course, or what former factories were where in regards to pollutants.

Hoping someone has an answer to this question!

When using ALE and looking at Family Trees we are running into a problem. If we have a results list of Family Trees for a person:

We go to a tree:

If we stay on this page, we can click the back arrow and go back to the list of trees for that person. If we go to the Gallery tab, and then click to go back to the results list, we get into a loop that goes back to the Lifestory page, then back to the gallery. We can't get back to the results list. Is this some glitch with Ancestry? A patron found that if you right click on the back arrow you get a pull down of your search that you can click on there. But shouldn't there be a return to results button or something? Thanks for any insight.

With the newest database release, IGRA?S All Israel Database records top 1,000,000!

The Israel Genealogy Research Association is proud to announce that in less than six years the IGRA database team, headed by Rose Feldman and assisted by Daniel Horowitz, Carol Hoffman and a league of volunteers, has made available to the public over 1,000,000 records relating to Eretz Israel from the Ottoman Empire through the British Mandate to the State of Israel.

A preview of the databases is available at

New Databases

Dublin Committee for the Relief of Russian, Polish and Palestine Jews
293 listings
This database is in English and contains the names and amounts of those who contributed. The information comes from the British Library. (Images available.)

Hashomer Hatzair Youth 1946-47 782 listings
This group was organized in Poland and was ready to come to Palestine under the auspices of the HaShomer HaTzair Youth. The information may include name, date, birth year, locality, country, gender and comments. The file was located at Yad Ya?ari Archives, Givat Haviva. (Images available.)

Petach Tikva Marriage and Divorces 1928-1931 686 listings
This set of records is in Hebrew and comes from the Petach Tikva History Archives and Museum. The records include the date, locality and status of each individual. (Images available.)

1940 Prohibited Immigrants 1,633 listings
This list includes people who were not granted permission to come into Palestine in 1940. Name, gender, age and nationality are available for each individual. IGRA received this information from the Israel State Archives. (Images available.)

Members of Histadrut Hamorim 1940 2,713 listings
This list includes all members of the Teachers' Union and was obtained from the Tel Aviv University. Besides the names of the teacher, there may also be the locality, neighborhood and name of the educational institution. (Images available.)

Municipal Employees Petach Tikva 1948 108 listings
This database is built from material at the Petach Tikva History Archives and Museum. For each worker the locality, birth year, occupation and place of employment may be available. (Images available.)

Using the CSI (Crowd Sourced Indexing) program, our volunteers have made available the people listed in this volume of the 1963 Israeli telephone directory. The phone book is in English. We will be adding to this database regularly. (Images available.)

Tombstones of the Jewish Cemetery of Salonica, Greece 2, 143 listings
The basis of this database is from a book written by Michael Molho found in the National Library of Israel. The images are of the index of tombstones found in this book.

Updated Databases

Enlistment to the British Army from Petach Tikva 1942 190 listings
In addition to the names of the enlistees, the following information may be available: the address, locality, date and unit/squadron. The data comes from the Petach Tikva History Archives and Museum. (Images available.)

1931-1940 Jerusalem Marriages 5,601 listings
These records represent an update to the existing database of marriages in the ledgers of the Sephardi and Oriental Communities in Jerusalem found in the Jerusalem Municipal Archives. The records contain names of brides and grooms with names of their fathers and the date of their marriage. The ledger belongs to the Council of the Sephardi and Oriental Communities, Jerusalem, who have given permission to publish this database. (No images available.)

Palestine Marriage/Divorce Certificates 860 listings
The listings may include: name, name of parent, occupation of parent, witness name and occupation, date, locality, address, age, religion, occupation. These records are part of a project in cooperation with the Israel State Archives. (Images available.)

Engagements 2016 858 listings
This database may include the following information that was listed on the Internet: the name, date, locality, gender, education and status. (No images available.)

Name Changes 1954 4,328 listings
The official government publication ? Yalkut HaPirsumim ? regularly published the name changes which includes: the former name, the new name (in both cases first and last names), the locality and the date. (Images available.)

Operation on Eagles Wings September 1949 8,637 listings
This database is done in cooperation with the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (JDC). These immigrants came from Yemen in an amazing effort to save this important population. (No images available.)
Before viewing the databases, please register for free on the IGRA website:

Hello!
I know our local history collection gets A LOT of use by researchers doing environmental research. Our city has had many industries at though out its history. We constantly have researchers doing work for environmental impact statements for infrastructure projects, re-use of industrial properties, and individuals concerned about toxins on their property. Our local government uses our resources to counter some people's claims as well.

Hope this helps!

As you've probably heard by now, FamilySearch is discontinuing their microfilm distribution services on September 1. (For more details, see here <https://www.lds.org/callings/temple-and-family-history/familysearch-microfilm-discontinuation?lang=eng&_r=1>.)

At our affiliate library, our patrons use the microfilm loan program fairly regularly and this news has come as quite a blow. I'm curious about other's reactions to this news... How are you letting your patrons know about the change? Are your patrons trying to get last minute orders in? Are you holding on to the films that patrons have ordered, even if that data is now online?

I'm also curious if anyone has any insight into the broader implications of the FamilySearch decision as it applies to the microfilm industry in general... Dick Eastman's blog posts/comments at https://blog.eogn.com/2017/06/26/familysearch-to-discontinue-its-microfilm-distribution-services/ and at (this 2014 post) https://blog.eogn.com/2014/05/29/the-death-of-microfilm/ seem to indicate that the FamilySearch decision is due to a limited supply of unexposed microfilm and microfilm duplication equipment. Does anyone have a sense of whether or not we will be seeing other producers of microfilm (say, for example, companies filming newspapers) discontinuing their... services?

This decision by FamilySearch really caught me unawares and I would love to here other's reactions and insights, especially how you're moving forward with this change in mind.

Thanks!

If you read Amy Johnson Crow?s blog http://www.amyjohnsoncrow.com/familysearch-microfilm-loans/#more-3268 she explains that FamilySearch actually duplicates the roll of film to send to the borrower, so it cost them a lot of money to copy those rolls, so it?s not cost effective to spend $85 on the roll and charge $7.50 to loan it.

The State of Indiana still microfilms, so I am not sure how it will effect other producters.

Lauren,

Bummer! Do you know if we are able to keep the films on Extended Loan? Will they put all those materials into the website?

For that reason I haven't let our patrons know about the change yet. I want to try to call FamilySearch again and get more questions answered before getting the word out far and wide. While the announcements and FAQs that have been put out so far seem to indicate that FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries may be able to get permission to keep the film longer, it seems to be a case-by-case basis, with our close proximity to several other FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries, they may not want all of them to stay open, so our patrons may not have that option in store.

One anecdote online I saw say that all film ordered after July 1 will be set to extended loan automatically, but this wasn't officially confirmed by FamilySearch anywhere online that I could see. I can definitely see a ?run on the bank? with lots of orders being placed in the next few months; if microfilm cost and staff time are really a concern this could create quite a problem with getting all the duplicates made and orders sent out before September 1st, FamilySearch would either have to honor those requests past September 1st, or some people would lose out on getting those copies if it's a hard cut off.
My last suggestion that I’m planning on sending to FamilySearch support – why couldn’t FamilySearch keep around a few service copies of film and start participating via InterLibrary Loan? We are an affiliate library here in Conroe, TX too. Just this past year we have had a huge increase in use by our patrons for FamilySearch microfilm loans, so this is going to be a huge blow to many of our patrons.

I haven’t gotten word out to patrons yet, after trying to call FamilySearch on Monday, I spoke to a lower level volunteer in the microfilm loan department; he told me the his manager was literally in a meeting trying to get more details about the move itself, and he mentioned there would be several other meetings this week. It seems like this was a top-down move and they are still trying to figure out the details to distribute down their internal chains to the points of contacts.

For that reason I haven’t let our patrons know about the change yet. I want to try to call FamilySearch again and get more questions answered before getting the word out far and wide. While the announcements and FAQs that have been put out so far seem to indicate that FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries may be able to get permission to keep the film longer, it seems to be a case-by-case basis, with our close proximity to several other FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries, they may not want all of them to stay open, so our patrons may not have that option in store.

One anecdote online I saw say that all film ordered after July 1 will be set to extended loan automatically, but this wasn’t officially confirmed by FamilySearch anywhere online that I could see. I can definitely see a “run on the bank” with lots of orders being placed in the next few months; if microfilm cost and staff time are really a concern this could create quite a problem with getting all the Duplicates made and orders sent out before September 1st, FamilySearch would either have to honor those requests past September 1st, or some people would lose out on getting those copies if it's a hard cut off.

My last suggestion that I'm planning on sending to FamilySearch support? Why couldn't FamilySearch keep around a few service copies of film and start participating via Interlibrary Loan? I was under the impression they didn't do ILLs because they had their own loan program. This could be a more middle of the road approach to help those researchers who still need the films that haven't been digitized yet and are unable to travel up to Salt Lake in person to do research. People might have to wait longer to get a particular film, but that's better than waiting four years for everything to be digitized. Just my 2 cents.

As you've probably heard by now, FamilySearch is discontinuing their microfilm distribution services on September 1. (For more details, see here<https://na01.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.lds.org%2Fcallings%2Ftemple-and-family-history%2Ffamilysearch-microfilm-discontinuation%3Flang%3Deng%26_r%3D1&data=02%7C01%7Ccarl.smith%40countylibrary.org%7C71d3bbebb6c140176a608d4be374145%7C7ca605285cfe64adb89b5fe5eebebc188%7C0%7C0%7C636342591919043516&sdata=E4mfAhuM2muso2WnkYiDBX0E4kJLSjTDbNK7RT%2B6rTg%3D&reserved=0>).

At our affiliate library, our patrons use the microfilm loan program fairly regularly and this news has come as quite a blow. I'm curious about other's reactions to this news... How are you letting your patrons know about the change? Are your patrons trying to get last minute orders in? Are you holding on to the films that patrons have ordered, even if that data is now online?
I'm also curious if anyone has any insight into the broader implications of the FamilySearch decision as it applies to the microfilm industry in general... Dick Eastman's blog posts/comments at https://blog.eogn.com/2017/06/26/familysearch-to-discontinue-its-microfilm-distribution-services/ and at (this 2014 post) https://blog.eogn.com/2014/05/29/the-death-of-microfilm/ seem to indicate that the FamilySearch decision is due to a limited supply of unexposed microfilm and microfilm duplication equipment. Does anyone have a sense of whether or not we will be seeing other producers of microfilm (say, for example, companies filming newspapers) discontinuing their services?

This decision by FamilySearch really caught me unawares and I would love to here other's reactions and insights, especially how you're moving forward with this change in mind.

Thanks!

The explanations I have read online don't ring true to me for these reasons:

1. The FHL already has duplicates of most of the films that are requested. We know this because films come in in old boxes and with other borrowers labels on them.
2. They already have the equipment in place. They have been making duplicates for years.
3. The financial loss on lending the films has been in place for years. Why is it an issue now?

It makes no sense to discontinue the lending program until ALL of the film is digitized.

On a related note, have you noticed that more and more often when clicking on the camera icon you get a message that "This image can only be viewed inside a Family History Center"? I know in Amie Bowser Tennant's blog and Tweet she mentioned that the FHC has had to renegotiate the contracts...

My apologies for not responding to the original message.

One problem for us in particular is that FamilySearch.org lists our (public) library as a Family History Center, so people have come to us to view images they can’t otherwise see. Once here they find that we’re only an affiliate library. There’s only one local FHC, and it’s only open 4 hours a week. Efforts to have the website remove us as an FHC have gone nowhere. Apparently many other public libraries are in the same position.

We are an affiliate library here in Conroe, TX too. Just this past year we have had a huge increase in use by our patrons for FamilySearch microfilm loans, so this is going to be a huge blow to many of our patrons.

I haven't gotten word out to patrons yet, after trying to call FamilySearch on Monday, I spoke to a lower level volunteer in the microfilm loan department; he told me the his manager was literally in a meeting trying to get more details about the move itself, and he mentioned there would be several other meetings this week. It seems like this was a top-down move and they are still trying to figure out the details to distribute down their internal chains to the points of contacts.

For that reason I haven't let our patrons know about the change yet. I want to try to call FamilySearch again and get more questions answered before getting the word out far and wide. While the announcements and FAQs that have been put out so far seem to indicate that FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries may be able to get permission to keep the film longer, it seems to be a case-by-case basis, with our close proximity to several other FamilyHistory Centers and Affiliate libraries, they may not want all of them to stay open, so our patrons may not have that option in store.

One anecdote online I saw say that all film ordered after July 1 will be set to extended loan automatically, but this wasn't officially confirmed by FamilySearch anywhere online that I could see. I can definitely see a run on the bank? with lots of orders being placed in the next few months; if microfilm cost and staff time are really a concern this could create quite a problem with getting all the duplicates made and orders sent out before September 1st, FamilySearch would either have to honor those requests past September 1st, or some people would lose out on getting those copies if it's a hard cut off.

My last suggestion that I'm planning on sending to FamilySearch support - why couldn't FamilySearch keep around a few service copies of film and start participating via InterLibrary Loan? I was under the impression they didn't do ILLs because they had their own loan program. This could be a more middle of the road approach to help those researcher who still need the films that haven't been digitized yet and are unable to travel up to Salt Lake in person to do research. People might have to wait longer to get a particular film, but that's better than waiting four years for everything to be digitized. Just my 2 cents.

As you’ve probably heard by now, FamilySearch is discontinuing their microfilm distribution services on September 1. (For more details, see here<https://na01.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.lds.org%2Fcallings%2Ftemple-and-family-history%2Ffamilysearch-microfilm-discontinuation%3Flang%3Den%26_r%3D1&data=0%27C01%7Ccarl.smith%40countylibrary.org%7C71d3b9e6cb1401791a68d4be374145%7C7a605285cfe64adb89b5fe5eebebc188%7C0%7C0%7C636342591919043516&sdata=E4mfAhum2muso2WnkY1DBX0E4kJLSjTDdBNK7RT%2B6rTg%3D&reserved=0>).

At our affiliate library, our patrons use the microfilm loan program fairly regularly and this news has come as quite a blow. I'm curious about other's reactions to this news... How are you letting your patrons know about the change? Are your patrons trying to get last minute orders in? Are you holding on to the films that patrons have ordered, even if that data is now online?

I'm also curious if anyone has any insight into the broader implications of the FamilySearch decision as it applies to the microfilm industry in general... Dick Eastman's blog posts/comments at https://blog.eogn.com/2017/06/26/familysearch-to-discontinue-its-microfilm-distribution-services/<https://na01.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Fblog.eogn.com%2F2017%2F06%26%2Ffamilysearch-to-discontinue-its-microfilm-distribution-services%2F&data=02%7C01%7Ccarl.smith%40countylibrary.org%7C7c1d3b9e6cb1401791a68d4be374145%7C7a605285cfe64adb89b5fe5eebebc188%7C0%7C0%7C636342591919043516&sdata=2FJeJYYiBDAoo0aClucK8X9mwJfcf9VMRU1%2BDFdgk3r28%3D&reserved=0> and at (this 2014 post) https://blog.eogn.com/2014/05/29/the-death-of-microfilm/<https://na01.safelinks.protection.outlook.com/?url=https%3A%2F%2Fblog.eogn.com%2F2014%2F05%2Fthe-death-of-microfilm%2F&data=02%7C01%7Ccarl.smith%40countylibrary.org%7C7c1d3b9e6cb1401791a68d4be374145%7C7a605285cfe64adb89b5fe5eebebc188%7C0%7C0%7C636342591919043516&sdata=20%2FhqrYeYTNLY%2Bgr9qiV9yrGIFwos7ut4ZvsaiNDrb%3D&reserved=0> seem to indicate that the FamilySearch decision is due to a limited supply of unexposed microfilm and microfilm duplication equipment. Does anyone have a sense of whether or not we will be seeing other producers of microfilm (say, for example, companies filming newspapers) discontinuing their services?

This decision by FamilySearch really caught me unawares and I would love to hear other's reactions and insights, especially how you’re moving forward with this change in mind.

Thanks!

It is clear that (1) the microfilm loan will have to end on the stated date, as there is insufficient blank film available to continue the program, and (2) it is certainly possible that not all film will be made digital, as this is up to the organizations with whom FamilySearch contracts.

1. Since we are talking about over 2 million rolls of film, there is likely to be film that hasn?t yet been duplicated (or if it has been, is already on extended loan to an FHC). Blank film is no longer available to make new duplicates from the masters.
2. It?s the microfilm viewers that are breaking down and are getting more and more expensive to fix (if it can be fixed).
3. Postal costs have gone up. The cost of blank film has become prohibitive. At some point, FamilySearch has to decide that the money can be better spent on digitizing records (both existing filmed records and new unfilmed records).

I do not agree with Dick Eastman’s comments in their entirety, especially his assumption that it will be easy to transfer digitized material to new formats, and that everyone will find it easy to do so every few years, nor that digital images will not lose any quality in the transfer process. That said, even Eastman was predicting that microfilm would be around until at least 2024, another ten years.

Our staff thought we would have at least five more years before we would have to deal with the cessation of microfilm as a preservation medium. Sure, we could switch to digitizing West Virginia’s many weekly newspapers, but we would have to be able to afford a scanner big enough to digitize newspapers. Look at the financial crisis our state is in, and others states in the same situation. Convincing a legislature that preserving our newspapers is vital could be a very hard sell.

By the way, keeping the old microfilm reader-printers working will not be the only problem with old machines. Toner is no longer being manufactured for the Minolta SP2000 reader printer. When the last existing cartridge is sold, all of the accompanying printers are garbage and the machine can only be used as a reader, as long as parts can be found, since it does not have a USB port to connect to modern printers. Oh, and you have to be able to find a technician who can service and repair the old machines. One of the justifications for the West Virginia Archives and History Library to push for purchase of the new digital systems, in addition to losing three reader-printers and three printers once the toner runs out, is that our beloved certified technician is moving away soon. With his help and ingenuity, we could keep going for quite a while with our Minolta MSP 6000 machines (this machine has a USB port, so it can survive if the toner for the printers is extinct). Without him, his replacement can continue regular maintenance and minor repairs, but will be unlikely to have the current technician’s insight into the operation of the equipment.

The new digital microfilm systems are great, but cost $12,000 or so for the system, plus you have to buy a computer, monitor and printer to go with it. You won’t see rooms full of them at these prices.

Hi Everyone,

Has anyone else run into this. A patron came in this morning specifically to print off some documents from FamilySearch and got a message saying the image wasn't available even though there was a camera icon beside the listing. I have tried... using several other computers in the library, and they all get the same message. Is this part of the changes in loaning films? Is the site having problems? Am I missing something really obvious? Help.

Fairfax County Public Library's Virginia Room has more books to trade--all related to Virginia this month. Please respond to our volunteer, Fran, at Bfm1010 at cox.net and Frances.Millhouser2 at fairfaxcounty.gov. Be sure to include your mailing address in your email so that we can make your mailing label. There's an Excel and a pdf version of the same list, so I hope everyone will be able to open it.

If you don't have anything to trade, please send a check for postage reimbursement (made out to Fairfax County Public Library) to

Laura Wickstead
Virginia Room
10360 North St.
Fairfax, VA 22030

Trades are allotted on a first-come, first-served basis. The volunteer will include a packing list of your requests in your shipment with a check mark indicating that the book is included in the shipment, or an N/A meaning that the item is Not Available because someone else's request was received before yours.

Yes. Unless you are a family history center, your access to certain content is restricted. We will be referring patrons to our area FHC.

Hi Everyone,

Has anyone else run into this. A patron came in this morning specifically to print off some documents from FamilySearch and got a message saying the image wasn't available even though there was a camera icon beside the listing. I have tried using several other computers in the library, and they all get the same message. Is this part of the changes in loaning films? Is the site having problems? Am I missing something really obvious? Help.

am glad they are at least preserving those items. So many genealogies and local history books are printed in very limited editions, making them virtually impossible to obtain. But they should restrict their use, so that the rights of the owner are not damaged.

RE: Copyright-protected works

I could be misremembering, but I think I've read something about their digitizing copyright-protected material, but only allowing one user at a time, with the physical copy removed from the shelf. If so, that should be covered under fair-use regulations. Such tight controls could actually promote sales to people who want more generous access.

It is easy for me to say (since I own no copyright-protected works), but I am glad they are at least preserving those items. So many genealogies and local history books are printed in very limited editions, making them virtually impossible to obtain. But they should restrict their use, so that the rights of the owner are not damaged.

A statement was made that blank microfilm is no longer available. I do not think that is true, but it is probably true that they cannot purchase enough blank film at an affordable price to keep going on the scale required to maintain the program.

It is clear that (1) the microfilm loan will have to end on the stated date, as there is insufficient blank film available to continue the program, and (2) it is certainly possible that not all film will be made digital, as this is up to the organizations with whom FamilySearch contracts.

A patron of mine has a relative who was a federal employee based in the U.S. Embassy in Budapest, Hungary in 1939. He died and she says it was a mysterious death. He was young. Earlier he was an attache in Russia and South American.

Is there any way to search those records and find further information?

Thank you for any assistance.

Mary,

This collection was compiled from four different NARA collections. The source information on the collection page has more details.

Note: "It does not include the deaths of active military personnel, which are reported to the Defense Department rather than the Department of State, or the deaths of individuals whose citizenship status was unknown."

Even if the Ancestry database doesn't have what you're looking for, the additional information on the page should give you some leads on where you could look next.

Amy

Mary,

Here are some National Archives Reference Reports that provide guidance on researching State Department employees:

As Amy Johnson Crow’s email mentioned, you can find on Ancestry a collection - Reports of Deaths of American Citizens Abroad, 1835-1974. But don’t stop with online records.

The patron should send an well crafted request for information by email to archives2reference at nara.gov with the pertinent information about the person.

State Department and other foreign service records are at Archives 2 (National Archives at College Park 8601 Adelphi Road College Park, MD 20740-6001).
