I'd like to switch to Chrome as the default browser but I'm having trouble seeing how to do that, primarily because Chrome requires logging in to a Google account. Hello,

Does anyone have policies related to their genealogy library they'd be willing to share? Right now, I'm interested in any and all. There has been some discussion of creating some to cover some potential issues. Possible policies such as:

- Relationship with local genealogy society
- Collection development & weeding, especially as it relates to archives, historic newspapers, etc.
Volunteers (our genealogy library is heavily volunteer led, which is a bit unique...)

Thank you!
Becky

Several organizations have published information that can help in your collection development policies.

National Genealogical Society - geared towards genealogists, not librarians, but some nuggets in each standard are usually applicable to library collections - <www.ngsgenealogy.org/cs/ngs_standards_and_guidelines>

ALA's RUSA (Reference & User Services Assoc) has 2 applicable guidelines - <www.ala.org/rusa/resources/guidelines>

1. Guidelines for Developing a Core Genealogy Collection (2007) - Seems to be intended for what I've designated as high support libraries (more than a couple of shelves)

2. Guidelines for Establishing Local History Collections (2012) - Seems to be intended for what I've designated as high support libraries (more than a couple of shelves)

WI Historical Records Advisory Board, part of WI Assoc of Public Librarians - <www.wisconsinhistory.org/libraryarchives/whrab/wapl.pdf>

Doing an internet search for the following terms will give you many good examples of the policies of other libraries and research facilities: (genealogy OR "local history") "collection development policy".

Subject: [Genealib] 16mm negative microfilm available for cost of shipping
Message-ID: <c5b12a32-f7e8-4c7b-a51e-d10eccc3c2d5@me.com>

Since the National Archives has ended its use of microfilm as a preservation/reproduction technology, it finds itself with a supply of 16mm negative microfilm on hand.

If there is anybody out there who can use it, speak up now. I understand it is available for the cost of shipping. I am not sure of the total quantity available. Send an email to me at Claire.kluskens at nara.gov and I will get it to the right person.
Don't delay. Time is short.

Thanks

Claire Kluskens

NARA - Washington, DC

So, for clarification -- the negative being offered in my email is NEGATIVE microfilm that is fit for use by someone who is using a microfilm camera for filming purposes. It's not copies of records.....
