Michelle, and others:

This issue was discussed earlier in the week (Mark Mullinex first posted). A look at the archives will bring up the thread.

Ellen Anderson then posted a work around, which is the one that Anne Mitchell referenced yesterday.

(We actually put together a little video on how to do this work around for our staff to know how to do this. It is internal to us but I can check about sharing it if wanted).
Have you noticed that when you search someone on AncestryLibrary the related links are not showing up on records any longer?

I'm just trying to determine if this is a change that Ancestry made or something wrong with us.

Thanks,
Michelle

Muriel,

Thank you for your quick and helpful reply. Our repairman retired several years ago. I was afraid parts might not be available for machines we bought in the late 1990's. They were wonderful in their day.

It was great to hear from you. I hope you are doing well and will have a wonderful holiday season.

I use Cavin’s Business Solutions. The service number that I have is 1-800-768-1213. It’s been a long time since I have needed repair on the machines so I am not sure if the number is still active. The technician Gene told me that he serviced both North & South Carolina and upper Georgia.

If you can't get it repaired, check with the LDS library in your area, they are downsizing their microfilm reader capacity because they are digitizing and indexing all their microfilm.

Hello everyone,

I reached out to our Ancestry Library Edition provider, ProQuest, to find out why the Suggested Records was removed from the display features. Here was the response:

"The Ancestry team informs me that the Suggested Records feature on the Ancestry Library Edition platform was removed for technical reasons and they do not have any current plans to reintroduce it. It's possible that may change in the future but for the moment the feature is only available on personal accounts."

Would Ancestry reconsider should we all register our disappointment with them? While it wasn't ProQuest who made the decision, they are the provider.
I have had the same thing with AncestryLibrary ignoring geographic searching. I and my staff are avoiding using AncestryLibrary if we can. I am beginning to search for alternative databases since AncestryLibrary has become so unreliable in returning relevant results.

Greetings Michelle,

Not only am I not getting the suggestions that used to appear, but the algorithm seems to be ignoring location info; I put in a specific city in Ohio only to get 20 matches from other states before the one for my searchee, though all have the same name. It seems to be forgetting to prioritize my results by location. This seems to be a recent, but pervasive, change. Let me know if others report the same fault.

Thanks,
Erica

That may very well be the case, that they want to render the Library Edition useless. However, I would suggest contacting your provider of Ancestry Library Edition, who will forward that on to Ancestry.

My ProQuest contact has been very supportive in forwarding these concerns.

I had not noticed the absence of hints on Ancestry Library, until it was mentioned here, on list. Very annoying!

As for the question of location restrictions, I happened to be working on a question involving someone who had been born in Scotland, and married a woman also born in Scotland, but married in Manhattan in the late 19th century.

I decided to do an experimental search on ALE, to see how it performed with locations. I did not have the kinds of difficulties that you are reporting. The search brought up records from both Scotland and New York - without my checking the box to limit the search. <<For whatever that factoid is worth!>>

Both Ancestry.com and ALE have become increasingly annoying, to me. Unlike the "old days," when the company was run by people who were passionate for genealogy, I get the feeling that it now is all about the dollars. Very sad.

Hiding the hints seems like a blatant effort to pressure library users to purchase a personal subscription. The "bean counters" over there don't realize that, by alienating their long-time customer base, they may well end up losing customers, rather than adding them.

Greetings Michelle,

Not only am I not getting the suggestions that used to appear, but the algorithm seems to be ignoring location info; I put in a specific city in Ohio only to get 20 matches from other states before the one for my searchee, though all have the same name. It seems to be forgetting to prioritize my results by location. This seems to be a recent, but pervasive, change. Let me know if others report the same fault.

Thanks,

Erica

Hi all,

Do any of you belong to a local genealogy organization or history society? If so, do you have in your by-laws how long records should be kept? (i.e. meeting minutes, treasurer's reports, etc.) If not, do you have any suggestions about how long these things should be kept? I am on the board of the local history and genealogy association. I am also working as genealogy librarian at our local library where much of these records are stored. I believe we should start making some decisions as the library is about to undergo a major construction project in the new year. I'm not 100% sure this project will allow for the amount of space that our records currently take. I'm worried that the records will all be in the new genealogy area which I don't mind. But the space is already small and I want to be able to have all the records that people routinely research there. I don't think I'll have space for all the boxes of history and genealogy association records that no one ever has a burning desire to see.

You might want to check with an archivist or a member of the American Records Management Assn., as they can point you to legal requirements and best practices.

I am Secretary for another organization and we have been told that 5 years is the legal requirement for financial records such as paid bills, check stubs, and cancelled checks.

For our genealogy society, we have kept all minutes since the founding. Prior to 5 years, we keep financial records that indicated a major expense (copier, etc), anything related to tax exempt status, nonprofit status, sales tax filings, secretary of state filings, etc.

Whatever you decide to keep, scan it and keep it on your organization Google Drive, where it can be shared with those who need access.

Talk to the local Historical Society before disposing of anything. They may be interested in housing them.

Fairfax County Public Library's Virginia Room has periodicals to trade. Please respond to our volunteer, Fran, at Bfm1010 at cox.net and Frances.Millhouser2 at fairfaxcounty.gov. Be sure to include your mailing address in your email so that we can make your mailing label. There's an Excel and a pdf version of the same list, so I hope everyone will be able to open it. Apologies for sending attachments, but the county won't allow us to use file sharing services.

If you don't have anything to trade, please send a check for postage reimbursement (made out to Fairfax County Public Library) to

Laura Wickstead
Virginia Room
10360 North St.
Fairfax, VA 22030

Trades are allotted on a first-come, first-served basis. The volunteer will email you to tell you that the box has been sent to our mail room, and she'll include a list of which periodicals or films are in the box.
Hello everyone,

I work at Sutro Library, California State Library, which is most widely known for its genealogy collection. The library is located on the San Francisco State University campus so we also serve students. We have been trying to figure out the best ways to bring in younger researchers, more specifically the college students. We've noticed that perhaps the word "genealogy" is a deterrent. Many students seem intimidated by this word, and since their free time in between their studies is so limited we can't expect them to research the meaning of genealogy.

My question is this: Are there any words that still encompass genealogy but are more approachable and appealing to younger generations? I immediately think of "Family & Local History" but I hope there is another term, preferably a one-word term, that is all encompassing and encourages students to utilize the invaluable resources that can be found in a genealogy collection.

Look forward to hearing your thoughts on this.

Thank you,

Dvorah

Dear Dvorah,
I agree that genealogy is a tough word to make appealing. I?ve been calling what I over forensic genealogy? since the 1980s, but maybe the word you want is ancestry? with a small a. The advertising the big company of that name does gives it a certain panache.

Great question. As you are on campus with a captive audience are the faculty from education, history, geography, ethnic literature, sociology, anthropology and others using your collection as a source for primary source materials? We have been working with various disciplines from University of Denver, University of Colorado, etc and the students are having a blast.

This would probably be a copyright or slogan infringement, but Who Do You Think You Are, or a variant. We used this as a marketing tool BEFORE the TV series, like back in the 1980s

I volunteer at the California Genealogical Society and Library and I must say younger folk are not interested in genealogy, family history, or their own story. We tried holding classes just for people under 30 and it fell apart after a few meetings. I believe this is a subject for the more mature folk, looking for something to do to stay connected.

Hello everyone,

I work at Sutro Library, California State Library, which is most widely known for its genealogy collection. The library is located on the San Francisco State University campus so we also serve students. We have been trying to figure out the best ways to bring in younger researchers, more specifically the college students. We've noticed that perhaps the word "genealogy" is a deterrent. Many students seem intimidated by this word, and since their free time in between their studies is so limited we can't expect them to research the meaning of genealogy.

My question is this: Are there any words that still encompass genealogy but are more approachable and appealing to younger generations? I immediately think of "Family & Local History" but I hope there is another term, preferably a one-word term, that is all encompassing and encourages students to utilize the invaluable resources that can be found in a genealogy collection.

Look forward to hearing your thoughts on this.

Thank you,

Dvorah

Smaller informal meetups under the banner of NextGen Genealogy (https://www.tnggn.org/) has been a great way to attract younger people into genealogy research. I've organized a few BillionGraves and Beer field trips, where we meet at a local cemetery, take photos for BillionGraves, and buy a round of drinks at a local pub (with free wifi) for everyone who attended. Young people under drinking age usually get a food item of their choice (usually cookie skillets or some other dessert). We use the wifi to upload photos and the pint to talk about genealogy apps and family history. If you don't feel comfortable with hosting an event at a pub, you could try free coffee/tea at a campus coffee shop.

Students are super busy, and they appreciate portability and the ability to share what they find on social media.

Some of the free apps you might want to highlight for use:
- FamilySearch
- FamilySearch Memories
- BillionGraves
- Pinterest
- PhotoScan by Google
- TextGrabber
- Photo apps - Instagram, Aviary, Darkroom
- Evernote
- SpeakEasy
- Mango Languages (if your library has a subscription)

Another great way to connect with students over the winter is to host non-appointment one-on-ones with free food/coffee for ethnic genealogy, sort of a genealogy roadshow in your local coffee shop. You need to publicize the crap out of this, but its great to host in the cold winter months, especially on early Saturday/Sunday afternoons.

I have a few more ideas to run past you if you need more help!

Best Regards,
Debra

Hello again,

Thank you all for your great feedback! Yes, we try to collaborate with faculty on classes with primary sources, and we hope to increase our partnerships with faculty in the future. Keep in mind these classes focus more on Adolph Sutro's original collection of rare and antiquarian materials not the genealogy collection. It is a work in progress!

While I realize that genealogy is not of interest to younger groups and is more easily done by older groups especially those who are retired, we want to make sure we are reaching our immediate audience, the students, in the best way possible. If there is a spark of interest to begin with in young folk, the fear is that the word "genealogy" extinguishes that spark. Perhaps instead of referring to our collection as the Genealogy Collection it may be more encouraging to call it: Family & Local History Collection OR Ancestry Research Collection. OR an even better term that encompasses not just genealogy, and heritage, but identity (both individual and communal). More thoughts?

I did the marketing and graphic design for NGGN a few years ago when they rebranded - we found that the key was to talk about "connections" and "stories" more than legacy or heritage. The idea that young genealogists are a part of something bigger than themselves seemed to really inspire a sense of curiosity and engagement. The new marketing campaign focused on action words instead of passive words (e.g. explore and engage instead of techniques and programs) and centered a bit more heavily on technology and things that had a cool factor than on pedagogy (although we threw some of that in there too). The real turn around happened when we built up trust and new members realized that content was created by people like them for people like them.

Young people get a lot of prejudice thrown their way by people who think that genealogy requires agedness in order to produce decent work - and it makes them hesitate to do genealogy in public. Proving that they are in a safe judgement free zone and that they won't get stared and gawked at goes a long way. Another thing that I think is important is making it clear that they are invited to come as they are and do as much as they can/want whenever they can/want. Because people in their 20s and 30s are busy and are a little wary of committing to another thing if they don't know what is expected of them.

I hope this is helpful. I'm deeply passionate about helping young people engage with history and genealogy and if I can ever be of any use I would be happy to talk!

Arlene,
I think you are correct on the ?more mature? group. Having taught genealogy classes at two local libraries for several years, we discovered that most people were in their late 50s at the earliest. After they have grandchildren and have the time, they become more interested. Younger people are juggling family, jobs, education, etc. and just don?t have the time to spend on Family History. I know I didn?t get into it on a regular basis until I retired and had time to spend on searching the family stories I and heard as a young person.

Same goes for joining lineage societies. My mother was a member since the 1970s, but my philosophy is that I don?t join organizations until I can be an active member and that didn?t happen until I retired. I think a lot of our young people feel the same way and will join later as their life is less complicated.

I volunteer at the California Genealogical Society and Library and I must say younger folk are not interested in genealogy, family history, or their own story. We tried holding classes just for people under 30 and it fell apart after a few meetings. I believe this is a subject for the more mature folk, looking for something to do to stay connected.

Who do we contact to become an affiliate library?

According to my understanding there are 3, or possibly 4, levels of access.
1) General access - anyone anywhere
2) Affiliate library - more than general (I think this is the biggest jump)
3) FHC - more than affiliate
4) FHL only - not sure about this one, but would make sense

levels 2-4 let you view more images, but there are still limits on how much of an item you can download (print?)

Does anyone know if they've started accepting applications for affiliate status again? My library isn't one. I know they stopped accepting applications when they stopped lending film in order to revise the criteria going forward. I haven't heard whether they've started again or not.

Yes, some materials are only available through FHCs. We've been an affiliate for some time, and will get occasional calls from users who ask if they can come to our facility to have greater access. Sometimes even if it indicates online that the material should be able to be viewed at an affiliate library, we are still unable to access it. This remains unresolved.

Ruth Tucker makes good points. I started at 30 but then I was working in a genealogy dept. From our own society we see that the "more seasoned" folks have the time to be officers and the younger fol can only come to the meetings.

Same goes for joining lineage societies. My mother was a member since the 1970s, but my philosophy is that I don’t join organizations until I can be an active member and that didn’t happen until I retired. I think a lot of our young people feel the same way and will join later as their life is less complicated.

I volunteer at the California Genealogical Society and Library and I must say younger folk are not interested in genealogy, family history, or their own story. We tried holding classes just for people under 30 and it fell apart after a few meetings. I believe this is a subject for the more mature folk, looking for something to do to stay connected.
The key requirement for a library-archives to become a FamilySearch Affiliate is having a static IP address. If you are a small institution with a minuscule operating budget like mine, that extra $100.00 +/- p/m ($1,200.00 p/y) has an enormous impact. We simply cannot afford that. We believe that becoming a FSA would likely become a draw for genealogists to visit our library-archives and which would also be good for FamilySearch. 2-3 times per year Verizon jiggers the internets and the IP address is changed. With NEHGS/AmericanAncestors.org, reconnecting to the new IP address is solved with a phone call. The phone call also gives us an opportunity to tell them how much our researchers love their resources. Why can't FamilySearch offer something like this to institutions who's operating budgets are under a certain amount? This would not increase the burden of tracking the stats by very much.

According to my understanding there are 3, or possibly 4, levels of access.

1) General access - anyone anywhere

2) Affiliate library - more than general (I think this is the biggest jump)

3) FHC - more than affiliate

4) FHL only - not sure about this one, but would make sense

levels 2-4 let you view more images, but there are still limits on how much of an item you can download (print?)

Does anyone know if they've started accepting applications for affiliate status again? My library isn't one. I know they stopped accepting applications when they stopped lending film in order to revise the criteria going forward. I haven't heard whether they've started again or not.

For those of you that are affiliates, could you tell me if this gives you access to additional materials? Are some materials still only available at a regular family history center?

I am a librarian at a large community college. One way to interest students more might be through faculty members. One of our history professors teaches a special topics course — meaning it is an elective not offered on a regular basis — in Italian American history. One segment of his class was genealogy. We collaborated with the local public library, which does more with genealogy than our college library does, to provide assistance to the students. He had good feedback from the students about this segment of the class.

For other younger folks, perhaps a similar arrangement with local schools could be made. One of my nephews, now in college, did a family history project while in the upper elementary grades or middle school, so other schools may do this. He was interested while he did the project, and after. He pays attention when his mother — my sister — and I discuss my research into our side of his family tree. He has even helped me locate headstones in cemeteries!

I have not done any of these myself, but I have thought about ways to bring new people into Genealogy. I am the director of a library with a very active genealogy department. I wouldn't call myself a passionate genealogist, but I'm interested in genealogy, so I would say that I would be similar to much of the audience you are interested in reaching.

Here are some of my thoughts for bringing in new people:

1. Capitalize on the Ancestry commercials. I think they succeed in large part because they tell a story. In your advertising, get people to tell a story. I applied for a grant (that I didn’t get) to promote our genealogy library. I was going to use the tagline “My favorite ancestor?? Encourage people to share stories of ancestors. Infamous, famous, just fun stories that are discovered. Maybe a story about a people group that is discovered while doing ancestry. I think if you could get the people who are passionate about genealogy to share one short story about one of their ancestors, it may get others saying, “I wonder who my ancestors are and what their stories are??

2. Have you seen ALA’s READ posters? They have software you can purchase to create posters with local celebrities. Especially for a small community, like a college, what if you did something like this? Created some sort of template, each person is holding a meaningful picture?their ancestor, a group photo, an old family home? And there is a short quote about what it means to them. Put these up all over campus, people see folks they know, they’re intrigued? Maybe?

Here are a couple “My favorite ancestors? that I might use. I think it just makes it playful, fun and interesting? and tells a story:

1. My favorite ancestor is John Billington. He was the first Pilgrim to be hanged on the Plymouth Plantation. (I told that to members of our genealogy society and I don’t think they were impressed, but I think quirky stories like that, especially in the far distant past, add to the interest for a younger generation.)

2. My favorite ancestor is Nathaniel FitzRandolph. He donated the land to form Princeton. Rumor has it that when he donated the land, he made an agreement that all of his descendants got to attend Princeton for free. Also, he’s the 9th great-grandfather of Obama. (But don’t tell anyone here in Texas we’re related!)

Another great way to connect with students over the winter is to host non-appointment one-on-ones with free food/coffee for ethnic genealogy, sort of a genealogy roadshow in your local coffee shop. You need to publicize the crap out of this, but it's great to host in the cold winter months, especially on early Saturday/Sunday afternoons.

I have a few more ideas to run past you if you need more help!

Hello everyone,

The library is located on the San Francisco State University campus so we also serve students. We have been trying to figure out the best ways to bring in younger researchers, more specifically the college students. We've noticed that perhaps the word "genealogy" is a deterrent. Many students seem intimidated by this word, and since their free time in between their studies is so limited we can't expect them to research the meaning of genealogy.

My question is this: Are there any words that still encompass genealogy but are more approachable and appealing to younger generations? I immediately think of "Family & Local History" but I hope there is another term, preferably a one-word term, that is all encompassing and encourages students to utilize the invaluable resources that can be found in a genealogy collection.

Look forward to hearing your thoughts on this.

I work with our Honors Dept. which offers a class called Genetics and Genealogy - it is co-taught by a Biology professor and a Humanities professor. Enrollment has been good and as of this year it will be offered every year.

I do one class session on using the Library's genealogy resources and how to use Family Search and another class session that is an open lab. In addition I offer individual instruction appointments as needed for the students.

What has been fascinating for me is the varied ethnic and national origins of the students - very non-traditional. One of the most interesting was a student who was Colombian immigrant and whose family had Italian roots dating back to WW 2.

Hello:

I have been running a very nice open genealogy lab at Truckee Meadows Community College Library in Reno, Nevada for about a year and a half now. The lab runs from 11:30am-2:00pm each Friday and is offered to our students, faculty and the public for at no charge. We treat it as an extension of our reference desk services. I started off with an attendance of about 8-10 per week, but am now averaging about 25 per week. My program is very exciting, we offer it on Fridays when the traffic in the library is traditionally slow. Our genealogy books are now the 2nd highest circulating books in our paper collection (reserve textbooks being the highest). I have been working with our faculty to incorporate genealogy into the curriculum. Starting in spring our English Department is adapting an oral family history homework assignment. This started with my introduction of StoryCorps into my Open Genealogy Lab. If it is successful another English faculty member has expressed interest in adopting it as well. I am going to be the embedded librarian in spring for the oral history assignment. At our Welcome Back Day for the faculty in January I have organized a Lineage Society event. All of our local lineage societies will have a table right by the lunch room where the faculty will be eating during their hour and a half midday break. The idea is to introduce genealogy to the faculty first, in the hopes that it will spark their interest in incorporating it across the curriculum. Each table will be giving away raffle tickets to any faculty member who visits them. During the lunch I will be giving away prizes that have been donated by the various genealogy vendors. Our library also became a Family Search Affiliate. I am working on many new and exciting events to promote my open lab and would be happy to share them with anyone who is interested.

If anyone is interested in knowing more about my program, please contact me at smalek at tmcc.edu <mailto:smalek at tmcc.edu>.

Hello again,

Thank you all for your great feedback! Yes, we try to collaborate with faculty on classes with primary sources, and we hope to increase our partnerships with faculty in the future. Keep in mind these classes focus more on Adolph Sutro's original collection of rare and antiquarian materials not the genealogy collection. It is a work in progress!

While I realize that genealogy is not of interest to younger groups and is more easily done by older groups especially those who are retired, we want to make sure we are reaching our immediate audience, the students, in the best way possible. If there is a spark of interest to begin with in young folk, the fear is that the word "genealogy" extinguishes that spark. Perhaps instead of referring to our collection as the Genealogy Collection it may be more encouraging to call it: Family & Local History Collection OR Ancestry Research Collection. OR an even better term that encompasses not just genealogy, and heritage, but identity (both individual and communal).

More thoughts?

I did the marketing and graphic design for NGGN a few years ago when they rebranded - we found that the key was to talk about "connections" and "stories" more than legacy or heritage. The idea that young genealogists are a part of something bigger than themselves seemed to really inspire a sense of curiosity and engagement. The new marketing campaign focused on action words instead of passive words (e.g. explore and engage instead of techniques and programs) and centered a bit more heavily on technology and things that had a cool factor than on pedagogy (although we threw some of that in there too). The real turn around happened when we built up trust and new members realized that content was created by people like them for people like them.

Young people get a lot of prejudice thrown their way by people who think that genealogy requires agedness in order to produce decent work - and it makes them hesitate to do genealogy in public. Proving that they are in a safe judgement free zone and that they won't get stared and gawked at goes a long way. Another thing that I think is important is making it clear that they are invited to come as they are and do as much as they can/want whenever they can/want. Because people in their 20s and 30s are busy and are a little wary of committing to another thing if they don't know what is expected of them.

I hope this is helpful. I'm deeply passionate about helping young people engage with history and genealogy and if I can ever be of any use I would be happy to talk!

Hello everyone,

I work at Sutro Library, California State Library, which is most widely known for its genealogy collection. The library is located on the San Francisco State University campus so we also serve students. We have been trying to figure out the best ways to bring in younger researchers, more specifically the college students. We've noticed that perhaps the word "genealogy" is a deterrent. Many students seem intimidated by this word, and since their free time in between their studies is so limited we can't expect them to research the meaning of genealogy.

My question is this: Are there any words that still encompass genealogy but are more approachable and appealing to younger generations? I immediately think of "Family & Local History" but I hope there is another term, preferably a one-word term, that is all encompassing and encourages students to utilize the invaluable resources that can be found in a genealogy collection.

Look forward to hearing your thoughts on this.

Thank you,

Dvorah

Arlene,
I think you are correct on the ?more mature? group. Having taught genealogy classes at two local libraries for several years, we discovered that most people were in their late 50s at the earliest. After they have grandchildren and have the time, they become more interested. Younger people are juggling family, jobs, education, etc. and just don?t have the time to spend on Family History. I know I didn?t get into it on a regular basis until I retired and had time to spend on searching the family stories I and heard as a young person.

Same goes for joining lineage societies. My mother was a member since the 1970s, but my philosophy is that I don?t join organizations until I can be an active member and that didn?t happen until I retired. I think a lot of our young people feel the same way and will join later as their life is less complicated.

Who do we contact to become an affiliate library?

According to my understanding there are 3, or possibly 4, levels of access.

1) General access - anyone anywhere
2) Affiliate library - more than general (I think this is the biggest jump)
3) FHC - more than affiliate
4) FHL only - not sure about this one, but would make sense

levels 2-4 let you view more images, but there are still limits on how much of an item you can download (print?)

Does anyone know if they've started accepting applications for affiliate status again? My library isn't one. I know they stopped accepting applications when they stopped lending film in order to revise the criteria going forward. I haven't heard whether they've started again or not.

Hello:

I have been running a very nice open genealogy lab at Truckee Meadows
Community College Library in Reno, Nevada for about a year and a half now.
The lab runs from 11:30am-2:00pm each Friday and is offered to our students, faculty and the public for at no charge. We treat it as an extension of our reference desk services. I started off with an attendance of about 8-10 per week, but am now averaging about 25 per week. My program is very exciting, we offer it on Fridays when the traffic in the library is traditionally slow. Our genealogy books are now the 2nd highest circulating books in our paper collection (reserve textbooks being the highest). I have been working with our faculty to incorporate genealogy into the curriculum. Starting in spring our English Department is adapting an oral family history homework assignment. This started with my introduction of StoryCorps into my Open Genealogy Lab. If it is successful another English faculty member has expressed interest in adopting it as well. I am going to be the embedded librarian in spring for the oral history assignment. At our Welcome Back Day for the faculty in January I have organized a Lineage Society event. All of our local lineage societies will have a table right by the lunch room where the faculty will be eating during their hour and a half midday break. The idea is to introduce genealogy to the faculty first, in the hopes that it will spark their interest in incorporating it across the curriculum. Each table will be giving away raffle tickets to any faculty member who visits them. During the lunch I will be giving away prizes that have been donated by the various genealogy vendors. Our library also became a Family Search Affiliate. I am working on many new and exciting events to promote my open lab and would be happy to share them with anyone who is interested.

If anyone is interested in knowing more about my program, please contact me at smalek at tmcc.edu.

Hello again,
Thank you all for your great feedback! Yes, we try to collaborate with faculty on classes with primary sources, and we hope to increase our partnerships with faculty in the future. Keep in mind these classes focus more on Adolph Sutro's original collection of rare and antiquarian materials not the genealogy collection. It is a work in progress!

While I realize that genealogy is not of interest to younger groups and is more easily done by older groups especially those who are retired, we want to make sure we are reaching our immediate audience, the students, in the best way possible. If there is a spark of interest to begin with in young folk, the fear is that the word "genealogy" extinguishes that spark. Perhaps instead of referring to our collection as the Genealogy Collection it may be more encouraging to call it: Family & Local History Collection OR Ancestry Research Collection. OR an even better term that encompasses not just genealogy, and heritage, but identity (both individual and communal). More thoughts?

I did the marketing and graphic design for NGGN a few years ago when they rebranded - we found that the key was to talk about "connections" and "stories" more than legacy or heritage. The idea that young genealogists are a part of something bigger than themselves seemed to really inspire a sense of curiosity and engagement. The new marketing campaign focused on action words instead of passive words (e.g. explore and engage instead of techniques and programs) and centered a bit more heavily on technology and things that had a cool factor than on pedagogy (although we threw some of that in there too). The real turn around happened when we built up trust and new members realized that content was created by people like them for people like them.
Young people get a lot of prejudice thrown their way by people who think that genealogy requires agedness in order to produce decent work - and it makes them hesitate to do genealogy in public. Proving that they are in a safe judgement free zone and that they won't get stared and gawked at goes a long way. Another thing that I think is important is making it clear that they are invited to come as they are and do as much as they can/want whenever they can/want. Because people in their 20s and 30s are busy and are a little wary of committing to another thing if they don't know what is expected of them.

According to my understanding there are 3, or possibly 4, levels of access.
1) General access - anyone anywhere
2) Affiliate library - more than general (I think this is the biggest jump)
3) FHC - more than affiliate
4) FHL only - not sure about this one, but would make sense
levels 2-4 let you view more images, but there are still limits on how much of an item you can download (print?)

Does anyone know if they've started accepting applications for affiliate status again? My library isn't one. I know they stopped accepting applications when they stopped lending film in order to revise the criteria going forward. I haven't heard whether they've started again or not.

n purchase to create posters with local celebrities. Especially for a small community, like a college, what if you did something like this? Created some sort of template, each person is holding a meaningful picture?their ancestor, a group photo, an old family home? And there is a short quote about what it means to them. Put these up all over campus, people see folks they know, they?re intrigued? Maybe?

Here are a couple ?My favorite ancestors? that I might use. I think it just makes it playful, fun and interesting? and tells a story:

1. My favorite ancestor is John Billington. He was the first Pilgrim to be hanged on the Plymouth Plantation. (I told that to members of our genealogy society and I don?t think they were impressed, but I think quirky stories like that, especially in the far distant past, add to the interest for a younger generation.)

2. My favorite ancestor is Nathaniel FitzRandolph. He donated the land to form Princeton. Rumor has it that when he donated the land, he made an agreement that all of his descendants got to attend Princeton for free. Also, he?s the 9th great-grandfather of Obama. (But don?t tell anyone here in Texas we?re related!)

As far as bringing in college age students, about 15 years ago I wrote up some guides to searching the then-current collection at my place of employment for these two classes at local colleges. The handouts were popular and we got mobbed with students working on their papers. In fact some were so good that they were published by the city historian in the quarterly Rochester History

I composed a reply to the college age question and clicked send without having deleted some of what I wanted to; it looks like I wrote more than I intended to, but it was just a clumsy copy and paste <sigh>

Hello everyone,
I wanted thank you all for your thoughts on tips for bringing in students! It has been been extremely helpful and enlightening.

On a similar note of figuring out the best words that encompass what we do, I am curious to know what everyone's job title is. If this was already covered in a previous email chain, please let me know. If there is a resource already out there that can answer my question, then please pass that on as well.

To make it easier and so as not to inundate everyone's emails with responses, I have created a Google form for this question. If you'd like to participate and share your title, please follow the link: https://goo.gl/forms/9KdmKoEu5vYVnkpn2 . I'd be happy to share the results with the group, e.g. this percentage of responses go by "Genealogy Librarian" etc. Let me know if you would like that.

Look forward to hearing from you all on this!

Best,

Dvorah

Does your library have a policy on whether to accept personal research in your collection? If you do accept it and it is in a three-ring binder, do you catalog and shelve it within your regular collection or do you shelve it separately? If it is in file folders, do you interfile them with other vertical files or in a separate section? Do you put any kind of gentle reminder to the users that they should double check the accuracy of these donations? If so, please share how you have worded that message.

Thank you.

Hi Sharen,

We will accept personal research, if it is organized. (We don't accept a bunch of loose papers.)

We have vertical files with family files, that are all donated research.

We just tell people who use the files that they will want to verify any information that they find in the files.

Greetings All:

Like Vickie, we accept research if it is organized. It is added to family vertical files.
We have sent donated family histories, that arrived in three ring binders, to the bindery.
I give no warning about accuracy of the information. I have no reason to believe that the donated family file is any less authoritative than the book on the shelf.

We accept research if it is reasonably well organized, with preference given to Nebraska-related families. If it is bound in some way and has sources/index/photos or some other sort of added value, we may catalog it and add it to our family genealogies. Otherwise we put it in our "surname files," vertical files. We generally don't accept pedigree charts and such that are just lists of names. We only have so much space.

We don't put any specific warnings on them, because all research should involve analysis and assessment of reliability, documentation, etc., and a published genealogy or local history is not necessarily more reliable than an individual's research binder—I try to educate newbie genealogists about sources in general.

Like Martha and others, we accept donated research (in fact, we actually seek it out), if organized. If there is too much for a folder, or arrives in binders, we keep it in binders, catalog it and put it on our "published" family history shelves. If it is going in a folder and has pedigree information, we cross index the surnames on the pedigree chart. It takes a bit more time to process, but the utility of the vertical files is increased 10-fold. It is especially handy when trying to find the "right" Smith folder to look up the surname of a non-Smith that married into the family - narrows the number of folders tremendously.

When introducing new researchers to our room, we emphasize that all information should be validated - print, vertical file, online. No source is to be treated as better than any other with a very few exceptions - Great Migrations, Mayflower Silver Books, etc. And even those can contain errors.

The NSU Alvin Sherman Library recently received a gift for its genealogy collection which included a number of yearbooks outside of our scope - they are from Illinois from the 1920's to 1940's though there is also one for the US Naval Academy. Condition is good though some are a bit musty.

Below is a list.

The NSU Alvin Sherman Library recently received a gift for its genealogy collection which included a number of yearbooks outside of our scope - they are from Illinois from the 1920's to 1940's though there is also one for the US Naval Academy. Condition is good though some are a bit musty.

Below is a list.

We at the California Genealogical Society and Library are not interested in the yearbooks you offer. When we get out of field material, we sell it on eBay so we can purchase something we really need.

Hi Nora,

We would take the remaining yearbooks if they are still available. They can be sent to my attention:

Scott Holl
History & Genealogy Dept.
1640 S. Lindbergh Blvd.
St. Louis, MO 63131
314-799-4300, ext. 2074

Thank you!

We just received this in a donation, and we only collect local yearbooks.
I'm happy to send it on to the first library that requests it.

Best wishes and happy New Year!

Have you looked at AddAll books.com or eBay for this title?

Yes, prices run from $400 - over $3,000. Was hoping to get one more in line with what I can afford to donate to our local genealogy library.

Elvina
You may be able to get a copy by calling 1-866-787-2363.
If you are with a non profit library, you may get a review copy.
