

'burg Blogs »

Last day in Kuwait

Posted January 21, 2014 at 9:40 am by mbastudents

By Liz Makofske, MBA Student

Our last day was free from any formal meetings so we spent the morning shopping and sightseeing at the Old Souk (Mubarakya) which is a big outdoor market that sells everything from clothing to food to jewelry. The Souk is divided into different areas depending on what the stores are selling. There is the fish Souk, gold Souk, etc.

Here are some of my favorite pics from Kuwait. The first few were taken at the Grand Mosque which is the largest and the official mosque of Kuwait. It can accommodate 10,000 people in the main prayer hall. Jeneca and I are wearing abayas.

Grand Mosque

Grand Mosque

Grand Mosque

Later that evening we went to Alhamra Tower, which I believe is the second tallest building in Kuwait City. We were able to go to the 55 and 78 floors to see amazing views of the city below. There was also an area on one floor which was opened up to graffiti artists to paint on the walls. In this area they have also held comedy shows.

We then went to the 360 Mall and had an amazing meal at B + F Open Flame Kitchen, which is a Kuwaiti run restaurant and is in the process of expanding. We had so much fun we were running a little late to the airport. This theme continued at Dulles where we had a tight connection to Tampa and just barely made our flight.

Alhambra Tower

Last Day