EDITORIAL

Acknowledgments.—In reviewing the contents of Volume 21 of the Florida Field Naturalist, it is gratifying to see a good blend of writing from professional and nonprofessional scientists and naturalists. This participation from a diverse group of contributors is beneficial to all members of the Florida Ornithological Society. I thank the authors who took the time to prepare their manuscripts, put up with the rigors of the review process, and revise their manuscripts into final form. I also thank Associate Editors Reed Bowman, Howard P. Langridge, and Richard T. Paul for their assistance. I am indebted to Victoria L. Merritt for help in proofreading the entire volume. The individuals listed below served as referees during the past year. Their efforts have contributed to maintaining the high quality of the journal. An asterisk indicates the individual reviewed more than one article.
