In the 1998 and 1999 banding summaries submitted to WBBA, staff at several National Wildlife Refuges took the time to summarize a large number of recoveries of their banded birds. Most of these birds were waterfowl, while some were raptors and passerines. In this column, I have summarized the most interesting of the waterfowl records. A large series of recoveries from the files of the National Wildlife Research Center in Colorado will be, hopefully, the subject of another column. The higher recovery rates shown by game birds gives us an unique view of the migration and wintering strategies of many of these species. [Looking at the large number of foreign recoveries reported by these banding operations makes a dickey bird bander such as myself very jealous.]

As usual, the records below are presented to highlight interesting recoveries and recaptures that have resulted from banding projects. Some of the records, such as the longevities, may be significant advances in our ornithological knowledge. For a list of longevity records verified by the BBL, see Klimkiewicz and Fitcher (1989) J. Field Ornithol. 60:469-494, and the papers cited therein. The most up-to-date listing of North American longevities is maintained on the BBL's website (www.pwrc.usgs.gov/BBL/).

American Green-Winged Teal

The following are records submitted to the column directly to me or through WBBA's annual summaries for 1999. Several extremely long-distance recoveries and a few longevity records are highlights. Several of the potential longevity reports have not yet been submitted to the BBL for review and incorporation into their databases—I encourage banders to submit potential records to the BBL promptly. As always, the recognized authority for accepted records is the BBL files. For published longevity records, see the papers cited in Klimkiewicz and Fitcher (1989) J. Field Ornithol. 60:469-494, and the BBL website (www.pwrc.usgs.gov/BBL). I thank Kathy Klimkiewicz for commenting on longevity reports for this column.
