

Re-Shaping the Future of Graduate Education in the Humanities

Re-Shaping the Future of Graduate Education in the Humanities aims to create a space where students, faculty and administrators engage in scholarly conversations concerning the development of a graduate educational experience that reinforces the value of obtaining a humanities degree. Join us for two round table discussions on the future of graduate education. The first conversation will be on issues graduate students in the Humanities are facing while in the university (curricular reforms, publishing, student activism, transitioning from the MA to the PhD, tenure track realities and strategies). The second conversation will be on opportunities outside of academia (alt-ac careers, resume building and informational interviews, stress management, alumni experiences outside academia).

The symposium will also include keynote addresses by Dr. Paul Jay, Professor of English at Loyola University Chicago and Dr. Steven Jones, Professor and DeBartolo Chair of Digital Humanities at the University of South Florida. Grad School education is changing. Be a voice in that change.

Thursday Feb. 9, 2017

University of South Florida
Patel Center for Global Solutions
4202 E. Fowler Avenue, Tampa FL 33620

Breakfast and lunch included.

Register for this FREE conference at scholarcommons.usf.edu/reshape/